I've never been big on holidays. Growing up Jewish, my family didn't celebrate Christmas or Easter. And being secular, we didn't do much for the Jewish holidays, either. Since arriving in Berkeley decades ago, one of the few holidays I've enjoyed is May Day, also known as International Workers' Day. http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/May_Day

As you can imagine, IWD is a popular day around these parts. In fact, it's an official city holiday. Along with Malcolm X's Birthday, Indigenous People's Day, and International Women's Day, the school kiddies and the city rank-and-file get the day off. Even some popular places, like Berkeley's Cheese Board Collective, close in observance.

I considered it a great honor to celebrate May Day, which represents all things Marxist. My deep and exhaustive knowledge of Communism was limited to the movies -- for instance, The Motorcycle Diaries and Reds. Warren Beattie and Diane Keaton appeared so courageous and passionate in Reds, and the guy playing Che was hecka hot. Anyway, Hollywood wouldn't mislead us, would they?

Consequently, I was deeply disturbed when the Soviets failed and the former Republics embraced the big and bad capitalism. Luckily, I could still wax rhapsodic about Cuba and dream of someday visiting that utopia. Since I'm playing True Confessions here: I even drove my car out of my way to fill up with Citgo, the gasoline from Venezuela.

What can I say? I was an idiot.

Locally, I did my part for all oppressed workers by being a union activist. When I worked at a large hospital chain, I was pivotal in starting a six-hundred-plus-member union.

Yes, it was SEIU. http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

I didn't know, wasn't told(, and didn't take the time to find out) that Marxism was a very bad thing -- that, in fact, hundreds of millions died thanks to it. The first time I heard of this was weeks into recovery from liberalism.

Having heard something vaguely about conservative Talk Radio, I happened upon Michael Savage's radio show. I was stopped dead in my tracks when he described the Gulags, forced shock treatment, mass starvation, and other horrors of the Soviet Union. http://www.globalmuseumoncommunism.org/

And then I actually started reading and educating myself. My beloved Cuba and Venezuela were run by thugs who oppressed people a zillion times more than any capitalist country. The workers weren't living in paradise, enjoying long siestas. Marxism, in fact, created serf-like conditions, with the very few, and the government, stealing the nation's wealth. http://www.thepeoplescube.com/

Of course, had I actually been paying attention all these years, I would have seen all the cracks in the Left's ideology. Earth to Robin: Why would all these people be getting into dangerous, shark-infested waters to come to the U.S. if something wasn't rotten in Havana?

I also denied what I saw around me when I worked for the government. For instance, at one agency in which I worked, managers were hogtied from ever disciplining or firing bad workers.

And when I say bad, I don't mean the person who runs late or gets a little edgy. I'm talking about the secretary who had a three-martini lunch and, upon return, punched a coworker. She was just transferred somewhere else, with her new department kept in the dark like we were.

Or the social worker who would get families more money than they deserved and then pocket the rest. While a manager made a valiant attempt to get rid of him, the last I heard, she was gone, and the dude still working there. I could go on and on...but you know the deal. You've been to the DMV or the Post Office or your local Social Security office.

Which brings me to today's May Day celebration -- a unique one, because the Left is now showcasing illegal aliens. While at one point I would have vehemently defended their "right" to be here, no more. Now I wonder why we should be welcoming with open arms people who are doing something illegal. Don't we have enough deceitful people in this country without importing more?

The Left plans to use the day to demonstrate the worth and value of illegals. To do this, both illegals and legals have threatened violent protests. There's nothing like ransacking stores and setting cars on fire to win over the country's hearts and minds!

I know what I'll be doing on International Workers' Day. First, I'm going to stay the heck away from Berkeley. Then I'm going to relax after a busy week of work. inally, I'm going to raise a glass to that most endangered of species: the taxpaying, working stiff who breaks his or her butt each day to bring home the bacon. This day is for you.

And my celebration won't even require riots in the streets.

And you were there to witness and report here all these times and places of history! LMAO @ Dr.DaviD PhD (piles highest & deepest).

May 1st to me as a Catholic is not May Day, but the Feast of St Joseph the Worker. This feast came directly from the attempts of various modern popes to address economic issues.

When socialism first reared its ugly head in the 1800s due to very real exploitation of poor workingmen in industrialized Europe, Pope Leo XIII wrote the first of a long line of social encyclicals called "Rerum Novarum (On New Things)". Rerum Novarum and subsequent social teachings basically made a few key points:

1) there is a fundamental right to private property grounded in the natural law;

2) private property is not an absolute right for man to do whatever he wants but must serve the common good of man;

3) socialism is always and everywhere anti-Christian and does not serve the common good;

4) workers can organize in unions but unions must serve the common good;

5) labor is primary to capital in organizing economic life because economic life must serve human dignity;

6) the State must intervene to help the poor only when other organs of society have not done so adequately, and that intervention must be at the lowest level possible (local vs national); and

7) the family is the fundamental organ of society, not the individual. Man is not homo economicus (economic man) but is rather created in the image and likeness of God who worked yes, but also rested on the Sabbath.

With all of this in mind, I find myself to be uncomfortably not at home in any one political party on the face of this earth but still leaning more toward the conservative Libertarian Republican side of things because on balance, they get it right more than wrong in this vale of tears.

Bullshit. IF, as you say, you are constantly being stopped, questioned or otherwise harrased by the police, it is undoubtedly because either by reputation or behavior, you have given them reason to believe that you are a whackjob who is potentially a danger to yourself, or your community.

In 35 years of amateur radio mobile and portable operations, in almost all 50 states; in dozens and dozens of towns, cities and villages, I have NEVER been stopped, questioned, detained or otherwise bothered by any law enforcement agency - even when driving vehicles literally festooned with antennas. With one exception, no cop has ever given me a second look, even when I have operated portable H/Ts in public locations and events right in front of them.

The one and only time a cop ever showed the slightest interest in one of my radios, it turned out that he was a fellow ham. He was thinking of buying the same model H/T I was using, and wanted to know how much I had paid for mine.

With your rambling, incoherent posts, you're only convincing people that you are not playing with a full deck. Nobody believes a thing you say - why do you bother?

That is an issue faced by many .. especially those with wind turbines for sure on high towers.

I am lucky enough to have the turbine and batteries housed in the same shed .. about 6 feet of wire (max) from source to batteries. Then I use an inverter at that point to send it to my house with 120v AC for about 50 feet using regular nomax (?) out door rated AC type wire you'd find at any hardware store.

But you can produce 'wild ac' as they call it at the turbine and then transform to DC to charge at the batteries for sure. I'm not uber sure how that works but I've read about it. A lot of wind guys have to do that for sure.

Two full lenght narrow pieces.I put one of my abrasive cut off blades on my Skilsaw (Skil, brand name, registered by Skil company) circular saw and I put on my respirator thangy.I know better than to breath that asbestos dust stuff.Mama didn't raise no fool, this fool raised himself.I also replaced three full size pieces, no cutting required on those three pieces.
You can't cut asbestos house siding with a chainsaw, that just wouldn't work at all.

He makes a relatively cogent argument about how the "aggressor determines the rules of engagement" likes that itself is a rule he was taught in the military. Since we torched babies at Waco, he said kids therefore weren't off limits.

Actually, the mechanical reduction of asbestos building material is usually left to experts who seal the house, keep the whole thing wet and constantly check air quality. By God, if you don't want jailtime and lawsuits, don't tell your neighbors!

I know all about lawn mower batteries too.I used to work at a factory in Florence,Mississippi and we manufactured batteries for cars and 18 wheeler trucks and motorhomes and golf carts and old style 6 volt batteries for Brit Crap MG cars and riding lawn mowers.Some of those big ass batteries are heavy as hell, one of them slipped off of one of the roller lines we had to spray oil on because some of those damn rollers wouldn't turn and that mofo battery broke the middle toe in two places in my left foot.

why aren't the police out catching some real criminals? Trust me, the police have no vlue to radio,tv, or electronics. I and several other people have consistently been pulled over and/or stopped and/or arrested by police stating phony radio laws they had/have no idea about.

Such as all CB radios are illegal for American citizens to possess unless they have an amateur radio licencse which specifiically permits amateur radio operations on the standard 40 CB channels.

By stating that I must follow that law and ordering me to do so, and telling me I would be arrested and piut in jail if I didn't, the police officer ordered me to commit a federal crime.

They also told me it was against the law for me to have an Ic-R3 radio. Because they are police radios the police talk to each other on.

By doing so, the police officer just admitted that he and the whole police department are guilty of breaking federal law.

I was told it was against the law to have a shortwave broadcast band converter/reciever in my car.

It only picked up the shortwave broadcast bands, nothing else, and not even all of them. It could only pick up the stations like BBC, Radio France, Radio Nederlands, etcetera, not even ham radio.

I and other people have heard the police and fire departments using frs and gmrs for their dispatch and other operations.

And if a citizen l(who is unaware the police uses it) listens for a minute on the channel, hears no one and transmits they are arrested and jailed for "transmitting on a police channel" even though it is no such thing.

And if they try to get out of it, the police will say it is a private police channel the citizen was illegally transmitting on because the police bought it and it even said right on the package "private line" which proves that it is a private channel and sincxe it is a private channel, no one else should be on it.

So as you can see, the police have no idea what the radio laws, rules, and regulations are even though they try to enforce them by trying to enforce non-existent laws, rules, and regulations.

Amd the written fcc rules don't helpm uch either since even English grammar teachers agree the way the fcc rules are written say that all CB radios are illegal for American citizens to possess.

What the FCC needs to do is reword the passage stating police have authority over illegal cb radios in a way where the polive won't think all cb radios are illegal and where the police understand that they do NOT have authority over legal cb radios.

Then again, even if teh FCC does that, it still won't help much since as you can see from all of the above, the police are intent on enforcing non-existent laws, rules, and regulations which don't, didn't, and never did exist anywhere at all in the first place.

And no, I was not speeding when any of it happened. One time I was driving. (the shortwave radio), the other time I was on foot (the scanner) and the other time I was parked in the legal parking spot in a park during legal operational hourss during the day for less than two minutes.

I did not even have time to get out of my car berfore teh officer came zooming up to arrest me simply because he saw ONE antenna on my car which was a legal CB magmount antenna.

Phone line as SW antenna

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area.
Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the | telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead.
Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should | be rated 250 volts or higher.

Phone line RF connector
red .01 uF center cond. / \
or o--------||-----------------------------|-o | To receiver
green \ /
50 ohm coax |
ground |
or o-----------------------------------------+ N.C. shield

N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:

Phone line RF connector
red -------- center cond. / \
or o----| |-------------------------|-o | To receiver
green | | \ /
| FILTER | 50 ohm coax |
ground | | |
or o----| |----------------------------+

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)

| impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.

Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics,

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

It is standard practise to give one's location, the frequency of interest, and the time when discussing radio events.

I do not try to divine the above data by reverse engineering 2 lines of

I will add this story from my own experience. When I was much younger, (24 years old) I had a "Hippy" looking Dodge Powerwagon Panel Truck. One Sunday I was driving in a strange neighborhood, looking for a Ham friends house, I had never been to. I Had a Motorola Tube VHF Radio with Remote Control Head, mounted in my truck that was setup on our local Repeater. It was a Hot Day and I drove by a parked Local Cop Car, and there was a conversation going on the Repeater at the time. Well Mr. Local Law (I learned later) heard the Squelch Tail, and decided that I was a nefarious BadGuy, with a Cop Radio in my Truck, and decided to pull me over. He asked for my Drivers License and Registration, which I produced, and then went back to his car, and radio'd it in to his HQ. After sitting there about 20 minutes I got out and walked back to his car, wanting to ask what the deal was. Well he got out, pulled his weapon, and ordered me back into my Truck. I complied. 20 minutes later three more Cop Cars showed up, one of them containing the Departments Police Chief, in civies. He came up, and ordered me out of my truck, and then proceeded to cuff me. After I was cuffed, he started asking questions about the radio mounted in my Truck. I told him that I had a copies of my 1st Class Commercial Radiotelegraph & 1st Class Radiotelephone Licenses in my wallet, along with my Ham Radio License, all issued by the Federal Communications Commission, and that the radio in question was on Ham Radio Frequencies that I was licensed to operate on. He told me I was going to Jail for possessing a Mobile Police Radio. I told him if he didn't release me at that moment, I would sue his ASS, his Department, and make his life miserable for a very long time. I also told him that I would be filing an Official Complaint, with the FCC the next day, against his Station License, for failure to do his REQUIRED Annual Certification Work on his radio system. (a bluff, because I didn't know if he had done it or not) We had a glaring contest for about 2 minutes and then he told one of his men to un-cuff me, and follow me out of his city, and left. Well I left his berg, and then next morning I was down at the Federal Building, at the local FCC Office setting up a SOLAS Inspection for a Large Freighter that was in Port, for which I was going to do the work on, and in walks Mr. Police Chief in his Official SuperCop Uniform. He was a bit taken back by my presents, and I was talking the EIC, (Engineer in Charge) so he asks me what I am doing there? I turned to EIC and Stated, " I am Officially notifying you that this mans Public Safety Radio System is out of compliance with the Terms of his Title 47 Part 90 Station License, and request that you investigate this Official Complaint." The EIC was a bit taken back, but he and I had a long history of dealings, with FCC inspections and other regulatory matters, and he turned to Mr. SuperCop, and asked him if what I said was true. Mr. SuperCop said he didn't know, but that he had had a run-in with me the day before, and was there trying to check up on Me, and my Licenses. The EIC told him that I was Licensed as I had stated, that I had a long History with his Office in Official Capacities, was well known as a very competent Radioman, in the industry, that since I had made an Official Complaint, he was bound by FCC Rules to send an Inspector to his Station, investigate my complaint, and should the Inspection find ANY FCC Rule Violations, the Inspector would shut down the whole System, untill a Licensed Tech could repair or correct the Violations, and then he could apply for a re-Inspection with the FCC. He then called on of the Engineer/Inspectors over, and dispatched him to go inspect the Station. The Inspector left for the garage to head out. Mr SuperCop went ballistic, and the EIC, just told him if he interfered with the Inspection, or returned the Station to Service without a re-Inspection, should it fail the Inspection, the Federal Marshal, down the hall, would be arresting him for a Federal Felony, and he WOULD be prosecuted. Mr SuperCop then left, and I went to do my SOLAS Inspection. The next day, I had another SOLAS Inspection with the Engineer/Inspector who had been sent to Mr. Supercops Station, and he told me that, sure enough, No Certification Work had been logged in the Station Records for THREE Years. He wrote up the Violation Notice, called it in for Approval, then on instructions from the EIC, turned OFF the entire Radio System, Sealed all the Off/On Switches with Evidence Tape, and then proceeded to do the same thing to ALL the Mobile Radios in ALL the Cop Cars. He then informed Mr. SuperCop that the EIC had instructed the local FCC Monitoring Station Watchstanders to monitor this frequency, and should they break the Seals and turn on ANY of these Sealed Radios, the Federal Marshal would be visiting, ASAP. Needless to say, It was twenty years before I ever went back to that town, even to visit. I found out later, that Mr. SuperCop was fired a six months later, by the Mayor, for Dereliction of Duty.

Years later, I was asked to join the Commission as a Resident Field Agent, and spent time doing these type inspections routinely. Never ran into the likes of Mr. SuperCop, in ANY of those inspections. It goes to show, that on occasion, sometimes local LEO's do get outside their area of jurisdiction, and get themselves in trouble. Not many, but there always a few, RAMBO types.....

That little action was just asking for trouble. You were stupid, plain and simple. When stopped by a police officer you never get out of the vehicle unless instructed to do so. Had you been carrying something that could have looked even remotely like a weapon, you could have been shot, and the cop would have been justified in doing so.

Yawn. Typical liberal/commie crap. Blame American citizens and make excuses for the invaders from Mexico et al.

I would add that the criminals in our government who have allowed this invasion from Mexico to happen in the first place should also be arrested and tried for treason.

Jesus was no socialist. He was apolitical and would no doubt condemn most modern politicians regardless of party.

Liberals constantly mock Christ and Christians ad nauseam 24x7, yet have the gall to claim Jesus as one of their own ("Jesus was a

One time back around 1994, I was exiting a shopping center parking lot in Fort Walton Beach,Florida.I didn't realize I was going the wrong way out of that parking lot to get back on the highway.I drove on across the Brooks Bridge and two cops wearing regular clothes pulled me over.They told me I had left that parking lot, going the wrong way and they let me go on my way.

I was driving at my speed (slow) heading back to Panama City and a Sheriffs Deputy pulled me over.He told me to speed it up untill I get to the four lane highway.

I am a slow poke driver.I stay on the slow poke back roads nowadays.

You know, I've been reading posts in this thread, and it truly amazes me that some of the very same people who _strongly resent_ the idea of the policeman on every street corner (or is it every tenth of a street corner these days?) being able to "demand your papers" (your ID) -- something I don't like either -- have _no_ problem _at all_ with the police state being able to demand not only your ID but intimate details about your family and home life, and every tiny detail of every financial transaction you have ever engaged in, on pain of severe punishment (ultimately enforced by uniformed goons with guns) when the Census man or the Internal Revenue man comes to call.

Isn't the latter much worse than the former?

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Kevin, I think gross inconsistency is a major part of the human condition.

I wish I saw more police everywhere - we're cut back so far we practically have one per square mile, in a densely populated area.

Much of what the IRS asks is if you have things you can deduct to make your tax burden lower; my main beef with that is that the thing is too complicated anyway, but at least it evens things out a little.

FWIW, the fully Constitutional Census asked very little of me...and it nets back some of the hard-earned tax dollars originally handed over to the IRS. In fact, I believe that my own tax burden was not enough, and I wish we wealthier people would be required to pay more than what we do. I find no problem with all of that. Others may, but again, inconsistency is legion among homo "sapiens"...

Exactly, if there wasn't a "hole" to fill, they wouldn't get work here, and so why would they come?

> You clearly have idea what treason means, so we can > discount that last comment.

There are a lot of right wingers (and some of the left wingers too) throw the word treason around all the time, and it almost never really applies to what they are claiming someone did. But you know, reality doesn't stop extremists very often anyway. What exactly do they think the government should do to prevent people from coming into the country?
It's an awfully long border. A wall wouldn't work, they would just tunnel underneath it, and it would cost an awful lot of money to build and maintain, and guard. I suppose it would cut down on the number of them coming in though, at least for a while. But the only rational thing to do is to make hiring them painful enough that people just won't do it anymore. I won't hold my breath waiting for that to happen.

It's kind of funny, I ran into two people I haven't seen for a while at the store yesterday, one was born in the same hospital I was, about 2 years after me, the other guy was born in Mexico. Which one can barely speak English? Well, the one born here, of course. The other guy doesn't even have an accent, and he came here at age 11. He told me he's going to take his citizenship test soon, he's sick of being hassled by the INS constantly. Every new guy the INS gets seems to pay too much attention to him. He's married (to a US born wife) and has lived here almost 30 years now, so why do they waste time with him? BTW, his parents came here illegally when he was a little kid, and after they finally got their green cards, he came up from Mexico, all nice and legal. The guy born here rarely works, unlike the guy born in Mexico, who has worked his way up from burger flipper to computer tech.

The census was hardly anything. I had it done in about one minute. I wish I could say I felt my tax burden was too little. My property taxes are ridiculous, one block over in the next city, they are 1/3 less. I don't see any real difference in services and road conditions. Supposedly the schools are better here, but I don't have kids in school, so I don't really care about that too much, if it's true. The teachers and school admins seem to be just as crazy as they are everywhere else, creating nonsensical rules, one after another. And I thought the teachers and admins were whackjobs back when I was in school. The present ones make them look totally rational. I never thought I would be saying that.

Income tax wise, I haven't gotten a dime back in 5 years, and I had to pay out a lot most of those years. I would love a straight 13-15% flat tax, I would have saved a lot of money. My boss paid less than I did last year, and his income is over 25 times what mine is. It's crazy.

Very good performance. Bothe RF and audio sections are well designed.

Oil spills are poison to the marine life.They should not be drilling

Amen Brother! Go tell it on the Mountain! LOL

I'm the last of a dying breed in the USA, an isolationist or protectionist. I say if they want to sell on our markets, they should pay their people at LEAST the equivalent of our minimum wage. That would help "level the playing field" a bit!

Politics, Religion, Race, etc..., are all nothing but diversionary

The National Enquirer and various other pseudo-journalism sources have made quite a profit from slander. When individuals do it, however, you can imagine them as kids pulling the wings off flies. Habitual slander suggests a sociopathic personality disorder.

I agree. I think that diagonal directional drilling may be able to partially resolve that issue these days. Better yet, let's figure out some real alternatives to petroleum at the first opportunity.

It's that last paragraph that really gets me steamed. People who receive gigantic salaries ought not be exempted into the lowest tax bracket. It just stinks, and it's a big part of what keeps the middle class scrambling to stay alive in this country.

Now, now, I did not assassinate his character, I just related a

I was kind of angry with him, but then again, I would do it (Pay half what I did) too, if I could. I figured it out and all together, fed, local, and state, I paid almost 20%. I would love 13-15. This year, it was 17, but it ended up being about the same amount, since I made a little more. June and July are going to be tough with estimate and property taxes due. Between the taxes, my mortgage, car payment, etc, etc, I'm not able to put much, if any money away at the end of the month.

To Whom it May Concern,

Pursuant to Article I, Section 2, Clause 3 of the Constitution, the only information you are empowered to request is the total number of occupants at this address. My "name, sex, age, date of birth, race, ethnicity, telephone number, relationship and housing tenure" have absolutely nothing to do with apportioning direct taxes or determining the number of representatives in the House of Representatives. Therefore, neither Congress nor the Census Bureau have the constitutional authority to make that information request a component of the enumeration outlined in Article I, Section 2, Clause 3. In addition, I cannot be subject to a fine for basing my conduct on the Constitution because that document trumps laws passed by Congress.

Interstate Commerce Commission v. Brimson, 154 U.S. 447, 479 (May 26, 1894)

"Neither branch of the legislative department [House of Representatives or Senate], still less any merely administrative body [such as the Census Bureau], established by congress, possesses, or can be invested with, a general power of making inquiry into the private affairs of the citizen. Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U.S. 168, 190. We said in Boyd v. U.S., 116 U. S. 616, 630, 6 Sup. Ct. 524,--and it cannot be too often repeated,--that the principles that embody the essence of constitutional liberty and security forbid all invasions on the part of government and it's employees of the sanctity of a man's home and the privacies of his life. As said by Mr. Justice Field in Re Pacific Ry. Commission, 32 Fed. 241, 250, 'of all the rights of the citizen, few are of greater importance or more essential to his peace and happiness than the right of personal security, and that involves, not merely protection of his person from assault, but exemption of his private affairs, books, and papers from inspection and scrutiny of others. Without the enjoyment of this right, all others would lose half their value.'"

Note: This United States Supreme Court case has never been overturned.

Respectfully,

[your name here]

Libertarian hero and small government crusader Rep. Ron Paul (R-Texas) has a message for the Census Bureau: "None of your business."

In his weekly column for constituents, Paul writes that the only question the Census Bureau has the constitutional right to ask Americans is, "How many people live here?" Anything more than that, the congressman says, is an invasive expansion of government power.

"It is not hard to imagine that information compiled by the census could be used against people in the future, despite claims to the contrary and the best intentions of those currently in charge of the Census Bureau," he writes. "The government can and does change its mind about these things, and people have a right to be skeptical about government promises."

The 2010 census asks 10 questions, the fewest of any decennial count in decades. In addition to asking how many people live in each household, this year's census asks for respondents' names, addresses, telephone numbers, and race or ethnicity. Past forms have asked for people's occupations and incomes, and even the make of their cars and their immigration status.

Even though the 2010 census questionnaire is among the shortest, conservatives such as Paul, Rep.Michele Bachmann (R-Minn.) and Sen. Tom Coburn (R-Okla.), have questioned the Census Bureau's authority to collect even the information on this year's forms.

Last week, Paul was the only member of the House to vote against a resolution encouraging Americans to participate in the process, which is used by governments to determine everything from transportation funding to the make up of congressional districts.

In the end, Paul writes, "If the federal government really wants to increase compliance with the census, it should abide by the Constitution and limit its inquiry to one simple question: How many people live here?"

Socialism has no room for a Jesus. Remember the phrase 'Religion is the opiate of the masses" ? In fact, religion is often used to keep the peasants in their place.

"First the Missionaries, then the Soldiers." That phrase could apply equally well to Imperialist Pigs or Commie Scum.

In fact, a devout 'leftist' sent me the following site:

http://www.evilbible.com/

Or was it a totalitarianistic zionist extreme Right Winger that sent it? I forget. All I know is that extremism of all sorts should be avoided.

When you are ready to kill your neighbour because they have a different viewpoint than you, there is a problem.

As for hypocrisy, it's only a matter of time until yet another TV Evangelist or 'Family Values' politician gets caught with a stash of crystal meth and a computer full of kiddie porn.

Is there nothing Sacred? Next thing you know there are going to be homosexual prostitutes visiting the White House at all hours of the night.

Nah...that's going too far.

The reason I asked orignally was that, a couple of years ago, I found the Sackeville DRM schedule on a web page and vaguely remembered a some transmissions not on 9800 kHz.

But then, of course, I can't find that printout in my file of random shortwave schedules. (Since I can't get DRM, I probably recycled that

(did, dig, dig) <http://www.rcinet.ca/english/schedule/>

It doesn't show up there now. The non-Canadian programs in the DRM schedule now only have the Vatican one on 9800, and a couple of other transmissions (from China and "Top of [something]").

I was with my girlfriend, this weekend, when she bought a car.
Simple transaction...pick one out, write a check. Drive it home.

I was amazed to hear the business office tell her that she was required to fill out a credit application for the transaction. Name, address, all credit card and all bank account numbers were required.
Rent payments, utility payments, any other oblications. Employment history for the last 10 years, with names and phone numbers.
Residential history for the last 10 years with names and phone numbers of landlords, mortgage companies.

And all sources of supplementary income.

When asked why the hell such detailed invasion of personal information was necessary to write a check...why not just call the bank verify the check and the amount, or hold it until it can be verified.

I was told this was required, in order to be in compliance with the Patriot Act.

Overpriced, underdesigned. Prone to overload. Fails in very high signal situations.

A random wire will do better on most receivers. Even a short random wire.

Does it do what's claimed? It does amplify the signal, and feed the front end of your receiver. Does it boost the signal over noise floor? No. It raises the noise floor with the signal. A well designed passive will less so.

Spend your money on something better engineered. For your $25 you can buy/build a lot better.

I have that little Radio Shack active antenna / preselector / preamp combo thingie they discontinued awhile back, and it ain't too bad.
Runs a good loog while on a 9v battery. Built-in antenna or outboard, your choice. Usually can be had on EBay for $20 or so - If you get it and it's not your cuppa, you can turn it around pretty easily.

Depends.

Midwest propagation is good both short and long path from about 1900UTC on becoming longer until just before sunset when there is a peak in propagation to Europe and then the middle east. In the early morning local time many Australian hams join in the local nets just before sunrise. The band goes more local again a few hours after sunrise.

In think peak propagation on 40m to Europe is 0000UT around here because I talked to G4ATA in England like he was local last week at that time.

And it's wrong.

What really pissed me off about Kerry, is that he ran on a platform of raising my taxes.

Kerry makes 5-10 times what I make. And yet, I pay more than he does already. I also donate more to charitable causes than he does.

Similarly with Biden, who insists that paying taxes is patriotic.

And yet, they wants to raise MY taxes, while exploiting all the exemptions for their own.

If this guy, and others like him, are convinced that more taxes need to be paid, lead the way. Kerry, Biden, Buffett, and Obiteme can write extra checks to IRS, and send them in. Show us how patriotic it is to pay taxes, by volutarily increasing their own tax load.

In other words, put their hands in their own pockets before putting them in mine.

LOL. My friend's little brother sounds just like him. I don't know about his views on the census, but he's super paranoid about, well, just about everything, to the point his kids avoid him at almost all costs after age 18. This last Easter, they all came and after he went into a paranoid Obama's Supreme Court nominations rant for the third time in about an hour, his oldest kid, a daughter, went off on him, and asked him, "Do you have any idea how embarrassing you are to mom? And us kids with this nonsense?" He fumed for the rest of dinner, then went into a religiously themed rant about how he would be killing a lot of people for Jesus when the "tribulations" and war with Satan came, and he hoped he wouldn't be shooting his kids, who have gone over to Satan's side.

Yikes.

Honestly, sitting in a car with him about 20 years ago, knowing he had at least one loaded gun on him scared the crap out of me, since he was ranting about killing for Jesus as we pulled out of the parking lot of a gunshow.

Sure, if I want to try to sell my house when there are a whole bunch of houses for sale in the area already? I will move eventually, but unless a lottery win is in the future, it won't be anytime soon.

I cannot argue there.

I am still willing to pay more taxes than I do.

Yeah, it's not like BOTH of W's elections were under a very large cloud

It could be worse, like in the bad old days, when they would give credit to anyone that could fog a mirror.

Last year, I wrote a rather large check (> $10,000) for the entire purchase price of a new Pontiac Solstice GXP...and no hassle, no holds, just "Here are keys and the title and thank you very much".

P.S.
Thank your friends W and company for the "Patriot" Act.

I cringe when I hear some talking head say that our forces in Irakistan are fighting for our "freedom". They are flailing wildly in the dark and serving my freedom negatively. I would respect our fighters more if they would refuse to go on bullshit undeclared missions to help impotent Kissinger clones save imaginary face.

Propagation generally can be figured out from the gray line map:
http://dx.qsl.net/propagation/greyline.html

However, 40 meters can be kind of an outlier. When conditions are good it can propagate signals worldwide (like 31m and 25m) for a good portion of day. This is why broadcasters don't want to give it up.

Indeed. Regarding the grayline, what I have found is that, not only is propagation right along the terminator good, but - even after darkness been over us for awhile, even into the wee hours, stations along the sunrise terminator continue to be enhanced until an hour or so after their sunrise. A wonderful thing!

I rarely get good international BC reception on 40/41 meters during the day; very spotty.

The dictates of the Washington regime have, with the wildly misnamed "Patriot Act," finally taken away _all_ of our financial privacy, which is a fundamental part of our personal privacy.

We have now reached the _end_ of the slippery slope which was begun when the Income Tax amendment was fraudulently imposed on the American people. (Fraudulently? Yes. It was sold to the people under the pretense that the proposed tax would never be imposed on wages, and would never need to exceed three per cent. even on the incomes of millionaires. We were told that wages, being an equal exchange of time and labor for an equivalent amount of money, did not result in profit and therefore were _not_ income and would therefore never be taxed. All these assurances were lies.)

That was the beginning of the pernicious concepts 1) that the criminals in Washington had the right to _know_ what your "income" was, and 2) that the criminals in Washington had the right to take whatever percentage of that "income" they so chose. Both concepts are utterly alien to any reasonable conception of freedom and to the ideals of the founders.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

It's really grotesquely unfair to compare Ron Paul's (and my) reasoned philosophical and legal objections to the expansion of the Washington regime's powers to interrogate with "paranoia" -- or with someone who channels imaginary gods.

Most recent prop report Monday AM:

0300 by VE7CC SFI=80, A=21, K=5, Moderate w/G2 -> Minor w/G1

...and you can tell, some of the bands are crappy. OTOH, BBC from the Seychelles on 6005 was pretty good earlier, and lots of other near-antipodal signals are solid tonight, at least 7 MHz and down.

WWV suggests that more G! is forthcoming. Hang on, we're in for a few bumps.

Heck yes Bruce, I got two of them. I was a newbie or just learning my way around when I bought them. They definitely work well but because of my lack of RF out here, it's just not needed. But they definitely do what they say and are alot cleaner than the tinyt. Like Peter said about the noise floor and all - I agree. I would imagine the Rat Shack active may do well if I drove out farther to BooFoo....then I'm sure it would help.

Ace, here in South Florida, the MW DX sucks due to all the damn Cuban stations being on almost every frequency and blasting north. Plus, all the local stations seem to be on every frequency 24/7 also! Used to pull in 880 WCBS very well, even over the Cuban, now a station in Miami is using 880, calling itself "The Biz", and now I can barely pick up NYC! Same thing with WPHT 1210, Cuban AND a Miami station on the frequency! Would love to pick up some Canadian AM/NE stations and anything west of the Mississippi! Only good DX was above 1600 when I got St. Thomas.

How laughable.

Who buys into the whole "active antenna" thing? Some of my best SWLing has been with a 5 or 6 foot hunk of wire laying on the floor.

Put your effort into a getting a good alignment. That will do you far better than these red herring gadgets that are just like a shiny lure to a sucker.

When you amplify, you amplify EVERYTHING...noise, distortion and often these gadgets inject products into the mixer that screw up your IF tracking, reducing the inherent performance of your receiver.

Quit looking for a "magic pill" and get back to basics: 1. Good alignment. 2. Wire antenna in unobstructed free space.

That's all you need.

Clive - many, many of us do not have the second of the two "basics" you mention here - so we have to improvise out the ying-yang to find something that will work. I'd give my front teeth (literally, and maybe my back teeth too) to live in a place where I have acres to string up wire and the nearest source of RFI is Joe's Bar neon sign 5 miles away in town - but it ain't to be. We need gimmicks to get us past the RFI, or we get nowhere.

PS - If I had 6 feet of wire on the floor, I'd get zip at this QTH.

This quote by Karl Marx has been grossly twisted and misinterpreted over the years to be an argument against all religions. Remember that at that time (1820-50), opium was a legal substance in Europe. Mostly used as medicine. Not mainly as a narcotic recreational drug we associate the use of it today. So in this context, religion could be seen as a medicine for the masses and not escapism and life-lie.

236. Perseus NDB's and Kiwa MW Loop

Resulting from my March Seefontein DXpedition
http://www.dxing.info/dxpeditions/seefontein_2010_03.dx the .wav data files from my Perseus SDR were posted to the net by my pal Guy Atkins
http://fivebelow.squarespace.com/posts/2010/4/19/seefontein-south-africa-dxpedition-wav-files-from-john-plimm.html you need a Perseus SDR to be able to view/hear these data files which cover the LF and MW spectrum from 200 kHz to 1700 kHz.

I was gobsmacked by the amount of interest shown from around the world and top DXer's from all over the place downloaded and commented on them. In particular the LF NDB beacon DXer's from Europe fell on them and dissected them with great enthusiasm. Apart from the expected Southern African beacons they also got 20 South Americans and 6 Australian NDB's.

Now getting 6 Aussie beacons is amazing, as the distance is 9000km/5600m and the power is less than 50 watts, so that was quite thrilling and shows just how that 1200ft/350m beverage at Seefontein pulls in the far distant signals.

So the Perseus SDR has proved it's worth and is great fun - the big thing with it is that you can record a 1600 kHz wide swathe of the spectrum, and at a time you choose. So you can get it to record TOH top of hour ID's in the wee hours of the morning unattended, and then play them back at your leisure during the day.

KIWA MW LOOP - as you know from previous posts this excellent antenna that has got me many a great catch on DXpeditions packed up. I took a mp3 recording and wrote to Craig at Kiwa to ask if he could send small parts and give instructions for me to repair it locally. Alas, Craig replied:
"I have been thinking about the loop and honestly, I have never seen the condition John describes. Not passing any signal is weird. I am going to need some time to think this over."

Sending the whole thing back to him in the States would cost about $700, which is out of the question. So I'm up the creek without a paddle.

And to make matters worse I think my RF Systems DX1 Pro MkII is malfunctioning as well, so will have to look into that too. Although it is picking up the more powerful signals, it is generating "S9" of noise, so it is only the more powerful stations that can be received.

You're basically right that the TinyTenna can't achieve miracles.

But what do you mean (or think you mean) by
a) Alignment.
b) IF Tracking.

There are more complex kinds of active antenna that can, to some extent, help you fight against local interference.

You mean the way Obama trebled it in less than 5 months? Or increased it 10 times over the period of his first term? I mean, if you want to have a third grade argument, we can. But you've demonstrated too many times that you're smarter than that.

The discussion, however, is that Kerry, like Obama, and especially Biden, ran on a platform of raising taxes for us, while doing everything he can to avoid paying his own. If he's so determined that more taxes need to be paid, then let him lead the way...pay more of his own money into the Treasury before he confiscates ours. If Biden is so convinced that paying taxes is a patriotic thing to do, then let him lead the way. Let him show us his own patriotism and forego his exemptions. Let him and pay more, before telling us that we must pay til it hurts as a matter of duty.

If it's a matter of taking care of the less fortunate, then donate more of his own money before redistributing ours. By his own released records Kerry donates nothing to charity. While you and I do, out of our own pockets. Bush and Cheney donated more out of their own pockets...more of their own money...than all the Democrats in Congress combined. While those same Democrats argued that we must be more generous, and take care of the less fortunate, by raising our taxes and redistributing that wealth, at the same time protecting their own.

Kerry, especially, makes 5-10 times what you and I do, and yet he avoids paying his share of taxes, while arguing that you and I must pay more. If George Bush had done the same, I'd be just as pissed at the double standard. But he didn't.

It's laughable at how the argument, no matter the topic, always gets pushed back to what Bush did or did not do. The truth is that I'm no happier about Bush's Presidency than I am Obiteme's. His administration is responsible for not one, but two lame-ass stimulus packages that did nothing but make busywork for civil employees. It cost the government about $2400 in man-hours to write those silly $600 stimulus checks that did nothing to stimulate the economy. While a simple tax cut would have boosted economic output, and in the process increased the flow into the Treasury immediately. Bush's administration further wrote checks on my future to bailout General Motors, Chrysler and how many banks and Wall Street brokerages? While letting them go to bankruptcy when bankruptcy first threatened, would have ended the harping, and started the rebuilding within two weeks. Instead of dragging the process out, further depressing the economy until there was no way the banks, the auto companies or Wall Street brokerages could recover themselves.

The reality is, that Bush did precisely what he ran against...government interference in the private sector. Had GM, for instance, simply been allowed to fail when the issue first came up, there would have been a bankruptcy, and another manufacturer, or manufacturers would have swooped in and bought up the assets for pennies, restructured the businesses, and moved on. For two weeks there would have been a lot of nail biting, stocks would have been depressed, and then recovery would have been well under way by the time the housing bubble burst and the real crash occurred nearly a year later. The economy would have strong enough to absorb the hit without spending nearly two trillion more out of public coffers, which created the public panic that virtually halted the economy for more than a year.

The economy is resilient. It has the ability to right itself after a bubble burst. Had it been allowed to simply do so, as with the crash of the 20's, the economic calamity that followed, like the Great Depression, would have been very short lived before recovery began. History has shown time and again, that economic downturns are short lived except when government interferers. And that the debt soars when the ruling party can't keep its hands to itself.

So, yes, I'm furious at Bush, as well. He took a well intentioned, and successful Presidency and ran it off the rails.

But that's not what this discussion is about.

You know, it's rare that Kevin and I find ourselves on the same side of a political issue, but he's right...both parties are abominations to the Founding Fathers' intentions, these days.

There are 535 people who can be blamed for the state of the nation. 535 people who have run for office decrying the enormous government waste. The same 535 people who could at anytime put an end to that waste overnight. And yet, they have not. 535 people who have run for office decrying runaway government spending. The same

535 people who could at anytime end that runaway government spending overnight. And yet, they have not. 535 people, every term who have promised campaign after campaign, that there will be improvement in government responsibility, government transparency, and government effiency. The same 535 people, who, every term fail to fulfill those promises, blaming the economy, the deficit, international terrorism, tooth decay and toenail fungus.

The deficit hasn't been addressed because those 535 people don't WANT it addressed. Because it's a touchstone for their campaigns. End the debt and they lose the issue that gave them their impetus for election. Government waste hasn't been addressed because that money is their pipeline to support in the civil sector. Runaway government spending hasn't been addressed because that money is the source of their power for that 535 people.

535 people. That's all it takes to end these ills. 535 people. Each one with the power to change things.

And yet, they don't. Because they don't want to.

It could be done overnight. In the dead of night. The same way they hide their efforts from those of us who elect them. But it doesn't happen because those 535 people con't want it to.

But all of this is not the issue at topic in this discussion.

The argument that we, The People, must surrender our hard-earned productivity to the Federal Treasury being made by persons who, themselves, exploit every opportunity to avoid their share of taxation is an abomination unto itself.

And that was the point of this discussion.

A series of tuned circuits, such as those found in a superheterodyne receiver are said to be in alignment when all paths are tuned to the correct frequencies. Correct alignment raises output of desired signals, while reducing noise floor. A receiver in proper adjustment-- proper alignment -- will perform often remarkably better on the same antenna, in the same location as the same model receiver out of alignment. Often by only a very small amount.

IF tracking is the property of two variable tuned circuits to produce a single output frequency across their entire range.

Forgive me if this is something you already know. A gross oversimplification, here, if you don't, will explain.

IF, or intermediary frequency, is a property of a superheterodyne receiver that improves selectivity, improves rejection of undesired signals, and produces a single, easily manageable signal for detection. IF is produced by mixing the incoming desired signal with a locally generated signal of a frequency above the desired signal that is a fixed difference from the desired incoming signal.

By mixing these two frequencies, the intermediary frequency is generated the frequency of which is the exact difference between the incoming and the locally generated frequency. There is also a frequency generated that is the sum of the two mixed frequencies, but that is rejected by the tuned intermediary frequency circuits which are tuned to a single fixed frequency.

In order for the intermediary frequency to pass through the tuned IF circuits, the intermediary frequency needs to be the same as one tunes incoming signals across the dial. That means that the mix frequency needs to vary along with the incoming frequency to remain precisely higher than the incoming frequecy by the amount of the IF. This is referred to as tracking. One signal tracks the other to retain the proper relationship as the tuning dial is moved.

Implements, like the Tiny Tenna, in some inexpensive receivers, can, if overloaded, produce their own mix frequencies that, in turn mix with incoming and locally generated frequencies to yield un expected mix products that produce variations in the intermediary frequency. In some receivers, a very strong signal alone can cause the IF to shift.

So, what the poster was referring to is proper adjustment of tuned circuits within the receiver, and the injection of instability by frequencies created by cheap active antennae disturbing the frequencies that must pass through those tuned circuits.

Again, apologies, if your technical understanding exceeds these oversimplified descriptions.

Seems like Gregg would really like a revolution to happen in the US so

JIm, I assume you refer to the debt, which is correct; it did not treble or any other whole number multiple . Peter's assertion about the annual deficit, however, is closer to the mark...Obama, with the help of most of Congress, passed increases for a number of reasons, for reasons that are well within anybody's memory. However, this almost certainly would not have happened if we had not been in a (hpefully) short-term economic crisis.

Peter - there is one issue that this argument, and many others like it, miss entirely - it is the FLOW of money, not the amassing of money, that keeps the economy going. Pure private enterprise, for all its innovation, tends to amass and concentrate money in specific places; in some cases, like Wall Street or the banks, that amassed money is either given to execs or squandered. The stimulus packages, OTOH, kept money flowing. So what if some of it goes to public employees? Public employees, at the end of the day, are mostly middle-class, mostly typical family people, and spend that money in turn at lots of private commercial stores - whether for clothing, cars, food, washing machines or entertainment of one kind or another. The private sector gets it back again...but in the meantime, someone's child not gone hungry, sopmeone has not lost his home or been unable to afford health care.

It's the flow that matters when the economy is tanking.

That's exactly right. FLOW matters. But only private sector spending. In the private sector, each dollar spent is turned over to create another dollar and that dollar goes back into the economy. Further, in private sector spending each dollar spent triggers productivity, which increases total domestic product, which increases the value of every other dollar spent.

Public spending comes from taxation, which is a dollar removed from the economy, lost in bureaucratic fractionalization, and then returned to the economy as a small fraction of it's original value. Like $600 stimulus checks that cost $2500 in man-hours each to produce. $1900 of that is lost to the bureaucratic maze. While $2500 in tax cuts to the same individual will produce far more in economic stimulation than the $600 check when taxation remains high. Because $2500 in tax cuts puts that full $2500 back into the economy, with corresponding productivity. More dollars, and stronger dollars, in the economy

Public spending, on the other hand does nothing to stimulate the economy because the government is not part of the economy. Government feeds on the economy. But the government produces nothing. A government dollar spent does nothing to stimulate production, so there is no increase in total domestic product, and no increase in the value of the dollar spent. Further, a government dollar spent requires infrastructure support of many more dollars in bureaucratic operating costs, which come from taxation. In the end the dollars spent are a fraction of the massive cost of bureaucracy, and taxation on the dollars put back into the economy are incapable of paying the cost of putting them into the economy. Fewer dollars, and weaker dollars in the economy.

Public sector spending regardless of volume, increases nothing, stimulates nothing. Because the government produces nothing. It only adds to the cost of government.

Two instances where an active antenna comes in handy are:

1. "Portable" use - I have a milspec preamp and a 3m whip I use with my AOR 7030+ for camping and vacations. I can set everything up in 5 minutes.

2. If the neighbors generate a lot of RFI, an active antenna placed as far from RFI sources as possible might make sense. RFI goes down as a square of the distance, so if you can have your antenna twice as far from a noise source, the rfi will go down by a factor of 4. In that case, while the active antenna will amplify noise as well as the signal, you're still getting a signal to noise improvement.

I have one of those too - a 65' random wire that feeds a preamp, and the coax runs underground in a pipe that comes back to the house. There, the preamp is mostly to compensate for the signal loss of a few hundred feet of coax.

The tiny-tenna does "work", but it's a very simple circuit you could make yourself with parts from Radio Shaft. Unless you've got a soldering iron and at least some of the parts on hand it's not apt to cost less than buying the ready made one. The Tiny Tenna guy is probably making about $10 an hour after you figure in all the expenses of making a product and running a business.

Milspec preamps are very well made and can often be found on eBay at a fraction of what they sold for new. ($40 is typical) Brands to look for include Avantek, Anzac, Watkins Johnson, Norlin, Aiken, & Applied Communications. (the last 3 are really the same company - they changed names often) Years ago I tried an Ar2 preamp and it worked well, but died young. The milspec ones are much more robust.

But the place to start is identifying what the problems are with your current antenna, and thinking about ways to solve those problems. You can accomplish a lot with wire, coax or ladder line, and an impedance matching transformer.

Not really, more interested in the Northeast, Midwest, west of the Mississippi, Canada. You are right, Florida is great for Central and South American stations, they flood us all night, and the Miami Spanish stations smother us during the day!

Yeah. Ok. Whatever.

Go ahead and convince yourselves the money you spend on this stuff is worth it.

Alignment is not rocket science. A piece of wire strung in the open air is what they used during the Depression for Pete's sake. Don't make this out to be more complicated than it needs to be.

John. I believe this is the second time you have had trouble with your DX1-Pro. is this, possibly a static/grounding prob? I admit, i love my 2 Wellbrookes, but, I do want to try the DX1 Pro MK2. Half the fun in the hobby is trying different antennas. There is little info, to be found on this antenna. So, I really know little about the use of this one. Is there some kind of ground, from the antenna itself, or maybe the inlet/ box, whatever you call it. I remember you talking about the dry winds in your area. Maybe your getting a static build-up of some type? I just can't find enough info on this egg-beater, to want to put one in my back yard. BTW, good luck with the KIWA loop.

I disagree. Public sector is roughly the same as private sector. I work in the public sector, but I spend my money in the private sector. The tax money that does not go into my pocket goes to various places, but they are either to others who ultimately spend it (again in the private sevctor) or it becomes something that somebody can use or enjoy, like a freeway overpass or a public park. Moreover, a good deal of R&D is done as a result of public funds. The money all goes back to someone or something as tangible as if it were the private sector.

If nothing else, money spent as stimulus keeps things alive - rather than on a permanent downward spiral - while the rest of the economy stabilizes. Without it, the flow ceases in time of economic drought and lots of even worse things happen. That may be worth nothing to you, but it counts with me.

All the money can't, Bruce. Every dollar has to support the bureaucracy that handles it. And that cost is multiples of the amount released. The government can't operate at zero cost. Hell the collection of the dollar, alone, costs many times it's value.

Look at your own budgets. See where the money goes. Where operating costs are defrayed, and the ratio of cost to dollars spent.

No one's suggesting, btw, that we curtain public projects like infrastructure improvements. Only that spending be reigned in when times are tight. And costs contained.

In times of economic drought, cutting taxes has worked every time it's tried. Without fail. Even Kennedy knew that. And don't think he wasn't fought tooth and nail on it.

Public spending costs. Cutting taxes produces economic activity which produces more available revenue to the taxation mechanics.

It never fails. It never has failed.

Peter - you act as though the money coming in to the government disappears, but that simply does not happen. What is a bureaucracy? It's PEOPLE. Plain, ordinary people, who spend the money after they get it and it then leaves the bureaucracy back to the overall economy. I admit, there may be more efficient ways to do many things (I try to be a hard worker and efficient, even though I loathe my job), but as long as something gets done it's nor a total waste, and even then, the money goes back to the economy afterward. And as far as I am concerned, I get lots of good things (some priceless) for the relatively meager taxes I pay, and I am happy for them.

I don't recall a specific instance where cutting taxes has done the population at large any good. Intuitively it SHOULD, and so in theory it should work, but a lot of assumptions have to be made about what happens to the money instead. It certainly does business a lot of good, the stockholders who own them and the wealthy who run them. However, you are assuming that this wealth trickles down to both the populace (workers) and the government - I have seen no sign of this EVER happening. If you include the loopholes that business and the very wealthy enjoy, those tax rates are among the lowest they have ever been (some large businesses pay practically zero each year) , and yet while the number of billionaires rises each year, the middle class erodes at a rapid pace and the poorer are becoming legion. Coolidge lowered taxes dramatically in 1926, and what happened 3 years later?

http://www.gusmorino.com/pag3/greatdepression/

Then in the 1950's America's business was booming with a 80-90% tax rate on them. Since then, the pendulum has slowly swung back, and look at the last ten years for a near perfect parallel to what happened 80 years ago. The only thing standing between what we are just now going through and another Great Depression (essentially the stoppage of the FLOW) are the stimulus funds - and I fear that even those may not be enough, since we are not yet out of the woods and there are plenty more derivative dominoes stacked on beds of mushy sand out there, not just in the US but worldwide. Just as in the GD we had far too many goods available for the people to buy (supply exceeded demand), as well as similarly dangerous speculative investments with no basis for the initial purchase, we now have exactly the same thing, with no clear end on the horizon, in the housing market - the single most significant domestic part of the economy.

Economists may disagree, but most of the economists I have read think the stimulus funds were necessary in the short term. I hate the national debt as much as anyone, and I see no easy way to pay ourselves out of it - and the obnoxous trade deficit that currently exists is no help either. In the long term we surely should minimize government excess as much as possible, but two years ago, almost everyone in the elected political spectrum knew it was the right step at the right time.

It's also absolutely true that the money taken in by the Cosa Nostra or a burglar contributes to "the flow" in exactly the same way.

What is a burglar or a crime syndicate, after all? PEOPLE. People who spend money in the overall economy.

The issue, in my view, isn't overall money flow.

Money is just a system of tokens representing how others value the things that you have done; tokens that those others will happily trade for the good things that they produce. Burglars and Mafia lords and politicians take those good things for themselves so you and your children can't have them. Of course, the scale of the thefts engineered by politicians buying the votes of the morons makes the Black Hand look like a kid's lemonade stand.

With all good wishes,

Do you mean the ability of the RF tuned and local oscillator tuned circuits to stay separated by exactly the IF frequency?
That's just part of alignment.

Maybe in a really ancient receiver. In all my receivers the local oscillators are either crystal controlled or locked by PLL to crystal controlled references.

A good modern receiver will stay adequately in alignment unless it's been fiddled with, all the important selectivity will be in crystal or ceramic filters anyway.

Alignment and IF tracking seem like really weird things to quote as important nowadays.

They might help improve sensitivity, and reduce intermodulation problems but other things like adding a preselector will produce more exciting results.

Actually, two years ago, nearly everyone in elective office knew it was the right step to preserve their immediate electability.

Ok. Look at it this way. And we're being optimistic here. A dollar comes into the government. It costs, for the sake of discussion, .10 to collect it, .02 for interest on any debt, and .02 for interest on any short term financing for deficit spending, again in the short term. That leaves .86 for the workings of government, salaries, spending, physical plant for government activities, and contract work. Which goes into people's pockets. Once that dollar is gone, another must be collected to take its place. Of which, only .86 cents will actually make it's way to someplace useful. Why? Because nothing is produced that could produce revenue that would make the government self sustaining. Instead, it takes a dollar out of the economy to fund itself. In other words, to sustain the government's operation, it must funnel dollars out of the operation in a continuous stream in perpetuity just to survive. Because it produces nothing.

Layer extra spending on that, and you have a dollar that's only .86 cents as it enters the government, but then has to be administered before it can be spent. That administration cost is deducted from the .86 before the remainder is spent. Optimistically, that's another .10. Meaning of every stimulus dollar spent, two are collected. One to fund the operation of the government, the other to fund the stimulus spending. With only .76 reaching the end user.

By contrast, Universal Amalgamated MegaTool, Incorporated enters existence with the intention of making East Frambesian Steel Blue Dubisaries and accessories. And it does so with funding of investors to capitalize the building of the business. From the capitalization, Universal Amalgamated MegaTool hires designers, contractors and construction workers to build it's plant. Money's already collected, are used to defray administration costs, at .10, interest on debt, at .02, and interest on short term financing at another .02. Leaving .86 which is spent on building the plant. Much of which goes into pockets of people.

So far, no difference between UAMT, Inc and the government.

But once the plant is built, things change. The company uses the remaining capital to purchase steel, hire engineers, and begin producing East Frambesian Steel Blue Dubisaries and accessories. The costs of the operation, so far, are added up, amortized over a reasonable period, and added to the cost of designing, engineering and producing East Frambesian Steel Blue Dubisaries, and accessories, including the cost of materials, shipping and sales.

A price is then set for each unit that covers the cost of each Dubisary, and/or accessory, that covers administrative costs, production costs, materials costs, mortgage on the building, and the cost of the MBA asshole who sends out memoes bitching about the costs. The price is set to cover these costs based on an early volume figure of dubisaries sold, with a corresponding annual increase in units sold for the next 5 years, along with a modest profit. When I got into business that was 30%. Today it's more than 50%. Sometimes a lot more.

Sales begin, and now new revenue comes into the company that defrays costs, pays salaries, and repays investors with dividends as capitalization reserves are restored. All without a single additional penny of capital revenue. If the company's fortunes are bad, and sales don't supply needed revenue, prices are raised or additional shares are sold, but the company's expenditures are revised, the corporation is restructured and it either reverses its fortunes or not. If not, the company fails, it's bought by Martin Enterprises from the stockholders for pennies on the dollar and either sold off in pieces, or relaunched with fresh capitalization, and a new business model.

Unlike the government which simply confiscates and distributes more funds without regard to waste, cost or and still realizing .76 for every $2 collected.

But if the fortunes are GOOD, the company beings to make a profit. Which is reinvested back into the company, paid out into investors's pockets as dividends, and banked as a reserve, which may be used to attract investors, if public, or held for future requirements if private.

In either case, Universal Amalgamated MegaTool is self sustaining, covering its own costs of operation, and production, while paying huge salaries, huge taxes to the government, benefits to it's union labor force, and dividends to investors. All without outside revenue. Turning every dollar collected in to multiple dollars out into both the private and the public sectors.

Now, in the event of an economic downturn, a healthy Universal Amalgamated MegaTool can trim it's fat, dip into its reserves, manage its own investments, and sustain itself through the recession. All the while paying out more than the dollar it takes in. Because it produces. It creates value for every dollar that it takes in. Every dollar it takes in it turns into additional dollars. Which are spent, invested, and saved. While salaries and wages are paid, costs are defrayed and efficiencies are improved all without taking in one additional red cent in investor revenue.

The government, in the same economic downturn, can only take in more dollars at the same ratio of $2 collected for every .76 distributed. Where as, if it simply cut taxes instead of the circular distribution of returning taxes at the same rate, administration and collection costs would be reduced, so efficiencies can be improved, and that .86 figure for running the government can be improved along with them.

Meanwhile, the taxes saved by the tax cut Universal Amalgamated Megatool realizes can be used to improve profitability, which can result in increased investor confidence, ongoing capitalization and continued, self sustained creation of value in the economy through production. While the general public with additional cash in hand and a less threatening tax bite begins to feel confident that it can afford, now, to regularly purchase East Frambesian Steel Blue Dubisaries, with an ongoing purchase of new and improved accesories.

All of which, then adds to government coffers, which now, more efficient, can spend its collected dollar at the improved rate higher than .86 cents.

The government can then reduce its size, further increase efficiency, and further cutting taxation, while Universal Amalgamated MegaTool hires more workers to further production of new accessories for East Frambesian Steel Blue Dubisaries.

Looking at the two models, the government can only take money out of the economy at an ever inefficient rate, especially as debt grows, and put only a fraction of the value it takes out of the economy back into it. While the private sector company, with good fortunes, can put more value into the economy than it takes to fuel its production engine.

In the end, government spending does not produce economic growth, because the government produces nothing. In the private sector, however, spending creates jobs, income, taxation for government and stronger economic power.

This is why the solution is then to cut taxes and let the private sector put money into the economy.

And this has worked every time it's been tried.

Kevin, I can not compare the actions of roadbuilding and maintenance, courtroom proceedings, national park administration, game wardens, basic scientific research, environmental protection and etc. with those of the Cosa Nostra. I agree, some politicians do crooked things with money, and some get rich off the government - but I personally feel very well compensated for the taxes I pay.

Many of mine, as well, yes. But there are those, even today which are not so.

The original poster's point is that with a properly aligned receiver, one begins with an optimized platform that will respond to less complex configurations with more satisfactory results. Better performance, lower cost, on the same radio.

My personal choices include preselectors, and a variety of antennae, active and passive.

Hi Drifter - yes, perhaps I must check my earth; I havent and it did break down once due to static and was sent back to Holland at great cost. They did increase the static protection before sending it back to me.

We have had a very dry past months and that may have ruined my earth connection - I'll go check it and put some water around.

I did have an ALA1530 for two weeks and had it up against the DX1. I

Like I said - those business tax cuts help business, but by and large wind up remaining with the wealthy and providing little benefit to the vast majority of Americans. Corporations are designed to do one thing only - to amass and concentrate wealth. In other words, greed. The fact that they do something to get there is only a means to an end. Greed does not usually propel an economy into a healthy state, and surely has done nothing of the kind in 21st century America. Tax cuts for business are a shell game.

That's why you cut the tax rates for individuals. Businesses don't pay taxes. People do. Businesses simply pass them along to the end customer. But if you cut taxes on individuals, you stimulate business. Because you stimulate private sector spending. You stimulate flow and you generate value in the economy. Every dollar creates more dollars.

Government spending doesn't do that.

BTW, currently have outstanding reception reports for:

R. Nac. de Amazonia, Brazil
VOA, Botswana
RN, Madagascar
CVC Christian Voice, Zambia (2 of them)
R. Africa, Equ.Guinea (2 of them; already received an enthusiastic e-mail, non-verie)
R. Tirana, Albania
Voice of Croatia, vis Germany
TWR, Monaco
TWR, Swaziland
V. Nigeria
R. Ukraine
R. Thailand
CRI, via Spain
V. Russia, Vladivistok
R. Australia
R. Victoria, Peru (already received non-verie e-mail)

So there's a bunch out there in the ether somewhere :-)

Why in the heck is that noise? Anyone else copying that? I even tried to see if by switching to CW if it'd change it up....basically sounds the same. A pulsing type of noise. I can't remember hearing that type of sound on 60 meters - though I may have and don't remember. Anyone?

You need to get a job Bruce. ;-P LOL - All in jest.
Just a friendly tip on the R. Africa /Equ. Guinea. - you will get enthusiastic emails from them - it is their M.O. :-) At least that is my guess.

Let me know about Monaco and Swaziland if you hear anything back, not for me personally - but so I can forward it to a friend. 10-4?

It may be two - actually I'm saying four Bob. I was wondering if it was some type of radar (but on 60 meters- I think not). It's nothing emanating from my QTH. I went out on my property and checked also. I don't know.

It's probably codar, OTH radar. You will find it everywhere down to about 4780 kHz as it sweeps the freqs. A hideous blemish on the face of 60 meters. Makes me crazy.

No problemo. Actually, I expect a QSL from R. Africa, as their website totally encourages them in exchange for QSLs. I think I already mentioned this, but after I reported, I heard back from their parent company's marketing people who excitedly asked if they could use my report in their radio marketing :-) The HQ of PanAmerican, BTW, is 15 miles from my house - so I can walk on in and demand my QSL

in person :-D

Only 15 miles from Equatorial Guinea ;-)

BTW, Gregg, was there something in particular you wanted to know about these two? They do QSL, and the last Passport has addresses for reception reports. The Swaziland outlet even has a DX secretary :-)

Well, I sure hear that sweep here, every day and night. I think it's somewhere near California, because it is LOUD and utterly obnoxious. I have it from 4855 to 4915, somewhat faster than once per second. A pox upon it.

297. 3287.45 kHz at 0505z - ?

Right now, at 0508z on Wednesday, 5 May 2010, I am hearing a fairly strong sideband het and AM carrier on 3287.45 kHz. SINPO is about 25222; hard to tell what any audio would sound like, since the carrier is open.

The A10 schedule shows nothing for this precise frequency, but it does show that at 0500, Radio Madagasikara is normally due to end its transmission on 3288 kHz. Is this possible? Does R. Mad. show up "off" a bit? This would be a first for me - hearing a near antipodal signal on a band below 60 meters.

Awesome propagation on the tropicals tonight!

Still there at 0536z. Still an open carrier from a distant location.

Why don't you invite YOUR FRIENDS over here to RRS Gregg, just like you did last time? The only activity of rec.knives now is just your troll friends bantering. Certainly no discussion on knives as such.
What I don't get is why you want to stir the trolls up about Steve Kramer. Kramer was long gone from rec.knives before you arrived on the scene there! In fact, all you know about him is what the trolls post and the veracity of that is highly suspect! You're even trying to goad Brain Anasta back into action as well.
Is life on RRS getting too tame for you that you feel the need to stir up trouble on newsgroups with which you have no affiliation?. It must be noted, sadly, that you are trying to stir up non-radio related discussion here on RRS as well.
Why don't you just stick to the topic of radio here on RRS and leave the other newsgroups well enough alone? Here's a clue for you! Why don't you try to focus on what a person writes rather than on the person themselves. It makes for a much healthier discussion that way! Just keep in mind that RRS stands for re.radio.shortwave. The focus is shortwave radio! You want to discuss politics? Try alt.politics. Want to pay around with a little anarchy? Try alt.society.anarchy! Want to discuss knives? Don't bother with rec.knives as your troll friends have destroyed that. All the posters from that discussion group have moved to moderated groups like Yahoo Groups where trolls aren't welcome. In fact, I've noticed that a lot of the usenet groups are lacking in posters these days as people get fed up with anarchic trolls and move to forums where they can freely discuss their favourite topics without fear of harassment from imbecilic morons. No doubt Steve Kramer has subscribed to these moderated forums as well given the amount of harassment you and your troll friends have been giving him!

BTW, YOUR friends won't keep me busy. I have them all filtered these days. They might annoy YOUR FRIENDS if you keep inviting them here however.

Yes, we can hear WLW here in Michigan. No HD interference on that frequency yet.

I could hear a station in Spanish on 730 kHz for a while then it faded out. I would not mind hearing a few Cubans, What frequencies are the strongest?

You could try CFZM on 740 if clear. Its a 50KW oldies station in Toronto. It is strong here.

As a followup, somewhat related - the tropical bands were pretty good last night, perhaps following the previous day's G1 and G2 storms.
Much more DX than lately (which is not necessarily saying much), and some of the bands were surprisingly quiet in between. Let's hope for more of this.

Anyone check them out this morning before sunrise?

Re-read your own link about Dr. Kellogg. He did not invent corn flakes to curb masturbation. Although he was a champion against masturbation, it had nothing whatsoever to do with his brother and his invention of cold cereals. That was strictly a revenue generating business which spun off to the brother running what is today Kellogg's Corporation and the corn flakes recipe was stolen by a former employee who started Post Cereals.

According to your own link, his solution to "self interference" was surgical.

Thanks for the cool link. I listened to all the ones except for the

In retrospect, this carrier persisted at least until I fell asleep at about 0630z. It had a long, strong and constant het mixed with a faint station on 3290, probably R. Central in Papua New Guinea (could find no other reasonable identity for that frequency either - right on frequency, with occasional hints of what could have been English or Pidgin language talk), and would occasionally experience a het from some other intermittent unid source possibly on 3285. Dang, I wish I had tuned in 10 minutes earlier! I may try again tonight, but that kind of propagation does not happen every day.

Big mouth full of dip, that's funny. Could it be just a different type of jamming? If you keep up with Glenns DXLD, (listening digest), he covers a lot of strange stuff, including jamming on his weekly listing.

www.worldofradio.com

scroll down to "latest listening digest". He also has a group on Yahoo "DXLD", if you happen to belong to yahoo. I get a kick out of Glenn and his battle with Radio Havana and China. Really cool guy. Good luck with this, sometimes thing's like this drive me nuts trying to figure out what the heck it is.

A battle we all share. Both China and it's innumerable RF incarnations, and RHC with its unnumerable frequencies, are a pain up and down the spectrum. I can only imagine that it must be worse to live near China than Cuba - is there a nation with more distinct SW broadcasting outlets than China?

When I got my TWR Bonaire QSL these 37 years ago (the classic Pink at the time. I don't recall anything else. We'll see!

At times, when the Dade County Spanish station on 710 is not spilling over.
I wish that it were still 500,000 watts like before and during the war.

Jim,
740 is taken here by a local(Palm Beach County) station, no way can I get CFZM. That is what I was saying, unless you want to hear Spanish stations all night long, then definitely South Florida is the place. For me, I want more variety and the ability to get more states added to my DX total. Hell, growing up in OK, I could practically get all the states(except for AK and HI). KOMA, 1520, at the time covered the entire Western U.S.

o What is rec.radio.shortwave for?

As stated above this group was created for USENETers to have a place to discuss the radio monitoring hobby. This group is not moderated, however 'serious' arguments and any kind of flame wars are strongly discouraged. That is not to say that genuine disagreement and discussion of differing opinions is not welcome. We only ask that you keep the tone friendly, and in the spirit of international cooperation upon which the hobby is founded.

This group is intended to be a place where ANY radio monitoring topic can and should be discussed. We are happy to hear from posters who listen to any part of the radio or microwave spectrum, from DC to daylight. We discuss topics of almost any kind, ranging from (but not limited to) shortwave broadcasting,
DXing small or distant shortwave stations, utility and teletype monitoring, military eavesdropping, station schedules, QSLing sw broadcasters, spectrum usage, equipment design and modifications, antennas, receiver reviews and recommendations, and many more.

Despite what the newsgroup name might imply, we definitely DO NOT limit discussions to shortwave only. Any radio-related topics are welcome.
People interested in scanning VHF frequencies may find that the rec.radio.scanner newsgroup more accurately reflects their interests, and people interested in pirate radio may want to check the alt.radio.pirate newsgroup, although this group seems to be more interested in building small FM transmitters than in hearing distant shortwave pirates.

For more in-depth answers to questions you may have, we direct your attention to the postings entitled "Welcome to rec.radio.shortwave (Shortwave)", and "Welcome to rec.radio.shortwave (AM/FM DXing)", depending on where your interests lie. Scanner enthusiasts are also encouraged to read Bob Parnass' excellent monthly FAQ postings on rec.radio.scanner.

Those were the good old days. For me it was Mexican border blasters and any station in California that I could ID.

Now we have to put up with that IBOC digital hash all over the band.

I'm looking at the Wellbrook, myself, at this location. How do you like it? And which direction do you have the major lobes

John,

Thanks for posting all those new Perseus files. There's a lot of stations jammed in there. Its makes for great listening and dxing while the electrical storms are moving through the local area.

Drifter, thanks much for that link - that's going to be hours of great reading and investigating. I totally agree with your take on Glenn and have known for years of his "grumblings." ;-) Indeed, he is a cool guy.

Well, here we go again.

QSL - NIGERIA, Voice of Nigeria, 15,120 kHz, 22 February 2010, 20:09z - 20:57z, "Zuma Rock, Abuja" (the same card they have offered for many years) - my full name and address handwritten on back, with printed space for full data, but NO DATA FILLED IN (sigh). I have no idea if they even checked it - but this time, I am assuming this is a valid QSL, 'cuz I know darn well I heard it! I filled the date and freq in myself, just so I can remember in 20 years! Also stickers, in an envelope with both the Lagos and Abuja addresses on it. Since I sent the report to both addresses, ands the card has no signature on it, I do not from which address it was sent. Se la vie. ~73 days.

perpetuates sham wars, continues extra-judical killings with collateral

Gregg. Back in the 50's to early 60's, being a smart-assed kid, I sent a report to RHC. Got the card, and I still get the propaganda to this day. kind of like it follows you around. back then i most likely was put on some list in DC, or my name went into a folder somewhere. they do send out some really weird stuff sometimes. VOR was another one that put ya on a mailing list. Even though the cold war has died, RHC still sounds like it's in the 60's.

No. He is in Santa Cruz closer to Brazil and Paraguay. What was interesting was that I was waiting for the amplifier to warm up so I called him with 50 watts. He came back to me on the first call. So conditions have already improved. Keep those sunspots coming.

A very quiet antenna partially aided by it's ability to be rotated away from most interfering noise sources. At this location I usually keep it facing SSE as this is the main direction for my interests, utility monitoring. For now an inexpensive Radio Shack rotator seems to be working fine. Very nice to have the ability to remotely control it's direction. Only once did the drive freeze during an ice storm.
When setting up it's location for best noise free operation, I placed the assembled unit on a temporary moveable base in order to try it a various spots around the yard. That spot was soon found although not exactly where I wanted it. The cable runs are now buried beneath the my wife's flower beds and a small rock garden and at some length from the house.
For a final touch the amazing 1026 removes almost entirely any lingering noise. Very pleased with the setup.
Please excuse my not replying to newsgroup posts at times as my job sometimes takes me away for extended periods. Thanks for your interest and the best of monitoring to the group.

You should check out how the "Amerikkans" treated the Irish 170 years ago.

I have an old Forest Hill School megaphone.It dates back to the 1950's.It is blue with white letters on it, it says, FOREST HILL
REBELS

It has an old fashioned metal handle on the side of it, just like an old screen door handle.
No doubt, it was used by some of those real cute Forest Hill cheer leaders at football games.

GO REBELS! Rah Rah Hippy Dippy, Best Team in Mississippi!

More often than not the A/D DX Sloper is the first one I use, I also have a longwire, but the sloper is hands down my best antenna for 60 meters - and just about everything else. I really need to add another one, something different....but I doubt I get to it this summer.

THANKS - I have a DX Ultra, sort of like two slopers back to back, and it's practically worthless on 60. oh, well...

Perhaps you should ask on a group that actually cares about HD radios.

The Distinguished Troll Society is hereby requesting that you two knobs reopen yh-knives and give it the old college try once again...Rec dot Knives is obviously NOT working for you so lets take this over to a fully moderated NG where we can play in earnest :-)...The DTS all have our "multiple user i.d's" that we used to crash your last party which means you'll have 15-20 "customers" posting right out of the schute (at one point I had 4 ;-)...Hey, maybe the Pink One will finally rear his ugly head and bring Howard, Kadek, and the crew out of retirement to join the knife knut parade...And there's a bonus; we can all listen to the retired Govt Tea Lady talk about his culinary receipes from the Outback...I know all the Trolls will be so thrilled...:-)

Perry Ferrel died in the car accident in the some time in the 80's or so, his wife Jeane kept it running and then some other fellow came in, bought it or co-owned it. Can't quite recall his name.

The name Gilfer came from Perry's last name Ferrel and his wife's maiden name (I guess) of Gillespie (sp).

OK guys, it's that time of the year again. anyone heading to Dayton this year? I won't be going. been about 2 years for me. just don't like the crowds there, too many people in one spot. been sticking to the local fests. went to the 2-Rivers and the next Breezeshooters fest in June. (largest in W.PA.). it's the season.

Mississippi exports some electricity to some other U.S.States.The folks in Kemper County,Mississippi want a new coal fired (Mississippi Coal) electricity power plant.The damn Sierra A.sholes are agains't that.Kemper County is appealing to the Commie A.sholes in fed govt for the new electricity power plant.

Every once in a while, there is talk around here for a new nuclear power plant to be added to the Grand Gulf nuclear power plant near Stennis Space Center.

Us Mississippi backwater hicks have elekstwicity.

Why don't you go head on and buy a MISSISSIPPI baseball cap? You can tell people you are a Mississippi backwater hick.

I still have a 1981 Gilfer catalog. Brings back pleasant memories of salivating over pictures of the R7A, NRD-505, NRD-515, and other stuff.

So who's left in the USA besides Universal Radio, Grove, and AES?

R&L Electronics is my radio heaven in the Cincinnati area, unfortunately it's a pretty good drive to get there - but I always make a day of it and visit the local diner before coming back home.
Radios/gear and a great diner, what a combination. :-)

Under equipment and Advertising: Gilfer Associates - Here are some memories of Gilfer Associates, Inc., a favorite shortwave mail order house in the 1960s, 1970s and after. Oliver P. (Perry) Ferrell and XYL Jeanne began the business circa 1952 and were well-known in the DX community. Perry died in an automobile accident in 1984 and Jeanne carried on the business until she sold it in 1994. Gilfer closed in 1997. Here are some Gilfer catalogs from 1970 and 1974. R.I.P., Gilfer and Perry Ferrell.

You're right - about 12 in the US according to their website.

Liberty Net for Week of May 1-8

http://3950.net/2010/05/liberty-net-for-week-of-may-1-8/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE WEEKLY Liberty Net was on the air in fine style this week, with lots of debate and controversy over politics, finance, the invasion of America on its southern border, and the malicious use to which the tragic oil spill might be put by foreign forces determined to keep America militarily engaged in the Middle East.

Here are some of the topics discussed on the Liberty Net recorded by N2IRJ on May 1st:

ï¿½ Has John McCain been replaced by a well-groomed look-alike while the real McCain vacations in Fiji? (1 hour 3 minutes)

ï¿½ Should Obama, Pelosi, McCain, and all of the Washington regime be forced to relocate to a temporary capital on the Arizona/Mexico border? Then they would experience what itï¿½s like not to be protected from the invasion from the south. (1 hour 15 minutes)

ï¿½ Was it a coincidence that the huge BP oil spill took place on Earth Day? Will it end up shutting down domestic oil production? And why was a SWAT team sent to the disaster site? ï¿½ who did they think they might have to ï¿½swatï¿½ down? What so-called ï¿½allyï¿½ in the Middle East benefits from keeping America dependent on Middle Eastern oil, which would keep us fighting their wars for them? (1 hour 18 minutes)

ï¿½ What should be done with crooked financiers who go broke? Apparently, both political parties think that they should be simply be given billions in taxpayers funds on a silver plate. (1 hour 25 minutes)

ï¿½ Why are more and more Americans seriously considering leaving the country? (3 hours 15 minutes)

ï¿½ Why did the U.S. government entice the owners of a perfectly legal sports wagering Web site in Antigua back to this country, just to arrest them for violating an extremely obscure and questionably interpreted tax law? (3 hours 18 minutes)

ï¿½ If the Earth Day destruction of the oil platform causes America to scale back offshore oil production, will the Chinese move in? (3 hours 48 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the story of Obamaï¿½s recent ï¿½mistressï¿½ in the pro-Obama National Enquirer just a preemptive cover for stories of his homosexual dalliances that may be about to break? (3 hours 50 minutes)

ï¿½ Why are automobile dealers demanding detailed financial information even from customers who donï¿½t ask for credit? Answer: The government demands they collect it for so-called ï¿½securityï¿½ reasons, ordered by the misnamed Patriot Act. (4 hours 3 minutes)

The Liberty Net is amateur radioï¿½s longest running discussion net, beginning in 1974 with Net Control Station W1WCR at the helm. You can listen and chat live while the Net is on the air (at 10 PM Eastern Time every Saturday night on or within 10 kHz or so of 3950 kHz) via N2SAG, N2IRJ, and other stations who link their streaming audio to N2SAGï¿½s. If you have an amateur radio license, feel free to check in. And, as always, you can download the latest mp3 recording of the Net right here at http://3950.net and listen at your leisure.

cuhulin does all the TV watching for me. I got rid of my set over five years ago. That may explain why I haven't seen it on the news.

I wonder how many of the fine denizens of this group use the radio and Internet as their sole connections to the outside world...

I'm listening to Hannity (sp?) on 1530 KFBK Sacramento. There seem to be a lot of these types on the radio. His purpose seems to be to get the audience worked up. Must be a need for ratings (or a subconscious need to emulate Foghorn Leghorn).

There's a Dayton, NV, too - an important town long ago in the Comstock Lode days, the V&T Railroad hauled lots of silver from mines near Dayton. Nowadays it's just a little place outside Carson City, with a neat set of stamp mill ruins and a fascinating cemetery full of dead miners from 120 years ago.

That, and ice/methane crystal build-up on the hygroscopic points of the device. It's cold down that deep, even in the balmy Gulf. The reports suggest the expulsion is now up to 3,000,000 gallons; could certainly be more than that. No matter how you cut these cards, a very bad deal.

Anderson,South Carolina was the first City in the South to have continous electricity.
http://www.hmdb.org/marker.asp?marker=10693

Howsoever, before that and before any Cities up North had continous electricity, electricity was only available for two or three hours in the evenings.
The old electricity power plant in Buffalo,New York was restored years ago for the tourist people to look at.

I don't know when Mississippi first had electricity.The big old house where I was born in Carthage was built by my grandfather and his brother back in the early 1900s.That house was the first house in Carthage to have electricity, we had indoor plumbing too.I remember the old style twisted insulated wires and the white porcelain insulators.Back in the 1970's, I disconnected the double row push button light switch that was

I wonder how hot the oil is. The lower it's coming from, the hotter it's going to be. Why isn't it melting the 'ice'?

As for the ice formation, if any, someone once said it was due to the expansion of gas as it comes out with the oil. I don't know enough about it to comment.

I do know, however, that ALL pollution or environmental degradation is caused by corrupt politicians. They are too cheaply bought.

Corporations' right to pollute ends at the start of my food, water and air supply.

No one can sell/trade/give away my rights to anyone else, but payoffs to the political class ensure that is exactly what is happening.

When a pressurized fluid is suddenly relieved of pressure it gets cold.
This is how your refrigerator works.

The little hole on top of the coffer dam is too small. The gas has already expanded way farther than tha, and the resulting cold from that, as well as the temperature that far below the surface, has caused the liquid methane and frozen saltwater to form the hydrate.

I'm wondering why they don't just let a big ice ball form in there (the 40' dingus) to see if it stops the leak.

Well, not mine so I dunno if it's a Valiant or not, but it SAYS it's a Viking.

In any event, it takes two men and a boy to carry either one.

Nice of you to offer, but be careful fixing stuff like that by "remote control". If the owner is knowledgeable, he doesn't need your remote help; if the owner is NOT knowledgeable, he damn well shouldn't be poking around inside the radio. Lethal voltages inside, ya know.

Just my 2 cents...

I think I have one or two old ultrasonic tv remotes around here somewhere.I will see can I find them.When doggy was a puppy, I bought an ultrasonic (I guess it is ultrasonic, I don't know) gadget at a Wal Mart store, it is suppose to be an aid for training dogs.It has two push buttons on it.

We had a Viking Valiant at KDIL back in 1971. We added a couple turns to a coil and got the VFO to light up on 1600 kHz. Made it from PHX to LAX at night, loudest station on the dial.

I suggest your friends learn all about rebuilding transformers.

Exactly - but I'd guess the pressure of the upwelling oil would easily topple the dingus if the stopper were left in place. I would not trust the anchors to the ocean floor, even if they we fastened to bedrock (which is unlikely, given the geography).

If you find a country, by law the rightful owner has 30 days to step

Play it slowly and a new mystery appears. It's not 4VHTIAE, I'm not sure but the only thing that is clear is the first 4. It may be a 4s6 (Sri Lanka novice with code) but that's awfully far from Italy. Possibly 4S6TIL.

If you ever do find out who it is suggest that they slow their ID down to about 3-4wpm and exagurate the spacing between letters. Then it is slow enough to copy the dits and dahs on paper and figure it out. It might anoy experienced hams, but inexperienced ones, or swl's can "get it".

There are also a lot of Eastern European hams running 3-4 wpm, having decided it was better to get on the air at the speed they can do, than to practice until they can reach the speed everyone else does.

Other hams are working them, so it works.

Geoff.

All Corporate 'campaign' donations have to be banned. Campaign donations are just another name for bribery. There can't be honest Government when all your representatives OWE someone something for having been elected.

HL Mencken had some insightful views on the subject.

"The government consists of a gang of men exactly like you and me. They have, taking one with another, no special talent for the business of government; they have only a talent for getting and holding office.
Their principal device to that end is to search out groups who pant and pine for something they can't get and to promise to give it to them.
Nine times out of ten that promise is worth nothing. The tenth time is made good by looting A to satisfy B. In other words, government is a broker in pillage, and every election is sort of an advance auction sale of stolen goods." [H. L. Mencken]

My prescription for new CW ops is this: Get on the air and push yourself to operate at a reasonable speed at (least 10 or 15 wpm).
However, until you're really comfortable operating at those speeds, play it safe by engaging in QSOs that are relatively predictable, like when some DX station is just exchanging signal reports and names with other stations. As you grow more comfortable with CW, you will be able to engage in less predictable QSOs and eventually you can just shoot the breeze with whoever happens to be listening.

Actually, it's both. That evolution takes place, is a fact. The details of how, from or to whence, are less certain.

The existence of evolution is clear. Demonstrable. By definition. The mechanics of evolution, however, are yet only understood incompletely. While the track of evolution through time is largely understood only within the framework logically built around the observations and evidence gathered over the study period, which, in the case of evolution, is ongoing. In other words, the understanding of evolutionary history is pursuant to and demonstrated by application of newer details in an ever more finely resolving image.

Witness the newer thinking concerning our relationship with Neanderthal that just became news as late as last week.

The term 'theoretical' doesn't mean an unsupported or diffuse belief. A theory is deductive. Formed by observation, and evidence, defined by a system of logic. It means that evidence has been assembled into a framework of understanding. 'Fact as currently known and understood by observation and evidence.' New observations and evidence may change the framework of the understanding, the theory is no less supported or logical.

The USA is a Liberal Democracy. Look it up.

Liberal democracy

Liberal democracy (bourgeois democracy or constitutional democracy) is a common form of representative democracy. A liberal democracy may take various constitutional forms: it may be a Republican democracy, as the United States, India or France, or a constitutional monarchy, such as the United Kingdom, Japan, or Spain. It may have a presidential system (United States), a parliamentary system (Westminster system, UK and Commonwealth countries), or a hybrid, semi-presidential system (France).

The term "liberal" in "liberal democracy" refers to adherence to the ideology of political liberalism.[1] Liberal democracies feature constitutional protections of individual rights from government power,[2] which were first proposed during the Age of Enlightenment by social contract theorists such as Hobbes and Locke. At present, there are numerous countries ruled by non-liberal political partiesï¿½parties that uphold conservatism, Christian democracy, social democracy, or some forms of socialismï¿½that are considered to have liberal democracy as their form of government.[3]

Well, that's about right, of course - thanks! The diffuse beliefs you mention come primarily from those who assume that "unsolved mysteries" with the "theory" portion constitute a wholesale condemnation of the concept; which, of course, is both a distortion of the scientific method and a self-serving method of fooling themselves back onto their comfort zone.

There is indeed a strong zero beat at 3287.44 - that's the RTTY carrier (which I had hoped might be R. Madagasikara the other night, but no cigar). 3280 Guyana has vox and mx, but it's a pretty small station, maybe just 1 kW? Depending on its antenna orientation (or yours vs. mine) or that extra bit of space between Californmia and Calgary, it may be lost in the hash. The LSB was definitely more substantially modulated, and easier to hear.

R75, 50 foot inverted-L NE-SW + AD DX Ultra ESE-WNW, phased for noise reduction (this arrangement helped a great deal too - I was able to gain a few dB s/n ratio over BG Noise with the MFJ-1026).

Yes, but it is clearly also a classical Republic, designed that way from the ground up by the writers of the Constitution. The two are not mutually exclusive.

That was my question too, Jim - when you get these nice catches, do you usually QSL them?

I have tried a couple of hams - one from the Slovak Republic, one form the Canary Islands during the contests in March - so far, no replies.

If I have not contacted them before, I do. Right now I have 2 cards

Japan is best for QSL'ing. I have received many cards from hams there.
They spend the most money on QSL cards too. They send cards with

The XU7ACY is a contest station meaning he rents it out to other hams.
I think it was the station owner who was on that day. You see it listed in the DX cluster as Kampuchea. This is the first time I have actually heard him. Once the solar flux increases, this will be a good

So did the courts, ultimately.

Marconi, like many, Bell included, took the work of other people, and with some good publicity, and aggressive procedural maneuvering, got credit for synthesizing concepts things that weren't necessarily his own ideas.

Hertz, Stubblefield, a number of others, and especially Tesla, laid the groundwork upon which Marconi built his reputation.

Something his disciple, Sarnoff, did in abundance. Zworykin under Sarnoff, was the father of television, until it was definitively proven that Zworykin had spent time visiting Farnsworth's lab.

Speaking of Television, at least one RCA (RCA brand name) Television set was was manufactured in Russia many years ago.Russia used to claim Russia invented everything first.

Wayyyyy back when I got out of the Army, I went to work for Ingles Appliances in Jackson.I drove a delivery truck, KBO 449 Unit 6 was the call letter/name thingy of that truck, it had two way radio.

One of the guys who worked at Ingles, he went by the nick name of Cowboy.Cowboy was real good at repairing radios and tv sets.One time Cowboy and I were making a delivery and he said, We will go to my house for dinner.

Cowboy's wife had dinner ready.Inside of their home was a black and white table model tv set sitting on a table, that tv set didn't have the cabinet on it, but it was picking up a real good picture.

STAGE BEING SET FOR “DIRTY BOMB” FALSE FLAG

“CHATTER” FLOWING IN FROM EVERYWHERE

“SUITCASE” NUKE SAID TO BE IN PLACE

By Gordon Duff STAFF WRITER/Senior Editor

Rumors of an upcoming terror attack to be blamed on Iran are moving around the world, “backchannel chatter.” The primary suspect is Israel who is said to have a number of small “suitcase” type nuclear weapons, some primarily “dirty bombs,” possibly supplied secretly by a previous US administration. These devices are in the “40 ton” range, highly radioactive, extremely small and can be engineered to leave the signature of a primitive device. They were originally designed for use against Soviet armor and troop concentrations in Europe if a massed attack on NATO were to occur. Current conventional systems have made this type of weapon obsolete.

All foreign aid to the entire Middle East and China has to be stopped.

Too many generations of the recipients, on all sides, have sent their children to European Universities off the proceeds of this on going scam.

Cut the money off and the state of permanent brinkmanship will end in few months. Why not use the money to fix roads, hospitals and schools AT HOME?

What do our politicians owe these people that they get free money in perpetuity? It's either economical stupidity or outright graft and corruption.

Marconi could send generic text, Tesla could only control a boat rudder.
As far as communicating via Hertzian waves, Tesla was first. Sending

The mud and cement failed. The BOP failed. The MMS didn't do their homework. The fireboats put so much water on the fire the rig sank, taking the riser to the bottom with it. They should've just let the thing burn and kept the riser intact. There'd be way less oil in the gulf right now.

The Halliburton guy is right. They did what they were told, based on BP's engineers. Somebody greatly misjudged something. I'm guessing there's more pressure than they thought.

Last year, I was looking at butt plugs on the web.There are different kinds of butt plugs.Inflatable butt plugs, vibrator butt plugs, see through butt plugs, different sizes of butt plugs, all kinds of butt plugs.
I almost plugged in my phone to call the Moonlight Video novelty store on I-55 Frontage Road South to ask them if they sell those kinds of butt plugs.Metinks it's best though that I leave my hairy old butt alone!

Now what makes you say that? Are you saying they were purposefully shortsighted? Clearly, they designed the Constitution to be flexible at times, and changeable when necessary, but the basic concept and construct are designed to last.

Sounds great! Too easy maybe? but great nonetheless.

In amateur astronomy, we have two kinds of observers -

Those who use a PC "go-to" to find and locate every faint galaxy to look at - and then sometimes they can see it and sometimes not, because they do not train themselves to hunt and then locate and observe; and

Those who do it the old fashioned way by using star charts and the Mark I eyeball method - and then usually they see it. It takes longer, but we usually bag our quarry, and the reward tastes just a bit sweeter...

I am not sure if this applies to what you're doing or not - but I surely enjoy the hunt and identification.

There was a void.

At least that is what was written by the bankers in the fifth dimension on my cheque for a long term lease arrangement on this particular quadrant of space.

It seems there's something like an Interuniverse Galactic Bypass being planned and they couldn't commit to anything more than an Eon by Eon arrangement.

It's difficult planning and building these galaxies when the powers that be can remove them without notice. Gotta run..I'm late for lunch with Nietzsche. Weird guy..never looks you in the eye.

At the end of Stan Freberg's wry comedy masterpiece "'The United States of America," the Brits have just lost the war by clever deception, practically gift-wrapping the victory over to dandy George Washington who fooled them with a giant Norman Rockwell painting of thousands of nonexistent troops - "We've been Diddled!" says the Brit General. Immediately following, once his lieutenant realizes aloud that they could still take Washington's depleted forces, the Brit General whispers something like, "No, don't you see? The Americans are so generous - now we can apply for foreign aid!"

We've been tooken advantage of ever since :-)

INDEED!!!

Don't forget Lloyd A.Davies cried like a bitch when Oris, N4CND, showed up at his HUD apartment.
I happened to be traveling through Huntsville, Alabama early this morning, I deceided to stop in Athens and see just how tough Lloyd Davies was going to act when he saw me in person.

Many of you know that a few years ago, Lloyd got smart with several people in the Deja Newsgroup (now Google) and I issued a challenge to him. I told him I would be attending the Dalton, Ga. Hamfest if he wanted to continue the conversation. He said he would be there and he was going to kick my ass.

Well, Lloyd was a no-show and continued the verbal assault on the newsgroups. He always talks tough behind his keyboard. And, I understand he is now doing the same sort of thing on the NIM Busters Board.

Well, about 8.35 this morning (December 23, 2004) I located his apartment in a nasty looking section of town. I'm a pretty good sized man, but I put my gun in my back waistband after exiting the car. I located his apartment and knocked on the door. The doorbell was missing and bare wires were sticking out of the wall. I heard someone say I'm coming and shortly the door opened with a safety chain lock still engaged. He asked what I wanted and I introduced myself and asked if we could have a conversation. He turned white as a sheet and attempted to slam the door, but I already had a foot wedged in the opening. He started shaking uncontrollably and was shouting leave me alone, leave me alone! I told him he didn't seem so tough now face to face and then noticed a putrid odor of urine and he was pissing his pants and crying like a baby. Please leave me alone Oris he said, I was just having fun and meant no harm, please leave, please. I could see the filthy floor of this apartment and the dirty floors and the stench of a grown man pissing on himself were almost enough to make me want to vomit, and I don't have a queasy stomach. Upon telling him that this time he would escape a ass kicking and not to ever get a smart mouth with me again and a verbal yes from him, I departed. That apartment complex looked like a crackhouse, niggers everywhere, filthy grounds and stairwells. Junk cars everywhere and garbage overflowing the garbage cans.

This Lloyd is nothing more than white trash that delivers pizzas and could afford to take a trip out of town if the ticket cost $5.00.

I'm sending this to a friend who despises Lloyd Davies and he wanted to post it for everyone to see just what kind of chickenshit asshole this Davies really is.

A Hidden History of Evil

Why doesn’t anyone care about the unread Soviet archives?

"One doesn’t need to be a fantasist to wonder whether these discussions might be relevant to our understanding of contemporary Russian policy in a region of some enduring strategic significance."

"There are other ways in which the story that Stroilov’s and Bukovsky’s papers tell isn’t over. They suggest, for example, that the architects of the European integration project, as well as many of today’s senior leaders in the European Union, were far too close to the USSR for comfort. This raises important questions about the nature of contemporary Europe—questions that might be asked when Americans consider Europe as a model for social policy, or when they seek European diplomatic cooperation on key issues of national security."

..."Baroness Catherine Ashton, who is now the European Union’s foreign minister, was treasurer of Britain’s Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament from 1980 to 1982. The papers offer evidence that this organization received “unidentified income” from the Soviet Union in the 1980s. Stroilov’s papers suggest as well that the government of the current Spanish EU commissioner for economic and monetary affairs, Joaquín Almunia, enthusiastically supported the Soviet project of gradually unifying Germany and Europe into a socialist “common European home” and strongly opposed the independence of the Baltic states and then of Ukraine."

"Perhaps it doesn’t surprise you to read that prominent European politicians held these views. But why doesn’t it? It is impossible to imagine that figures who had enjoyed such close ties to the Nazi Party—or, for that matter, to the Ku Klux Klan or to South Africa’s apartheid regime—would enjoy top positions in Europe today. The rules are different, apparently, for Communist fellow travelers. “We now have the EU unelected socialist party running Europe,” Stroilov said to me. “Bet the KGB can’t believe it.”

"And what of Zagladin’s description of his dealings with our own current vice president in 1979?"

"Unofficially, [Senator Joseph] Biden and [Senator Richard] Lugar said that, in the end of the day, they were not so much concerned with having a problem of this or that citizen solved as with showing to the American public that they do care for “human rights.” . . . In other words, the collocutors directly admitted that what is happening is a kind of a show, that they absolutely do not care for the fate of most so-called dissidents."

Shucks, Mister dave,...keeping a boat from crashing into stuff seems kinda practical to me...more so than any "Watson, come here, I need you.." sorta stuff. Then there is the Matter of Fessenden...

http://www.fessenden.ca/

To muddy the waters even more:
==========
In 2001, Vito Fossella (R-N.Y.) introduced a resolution to honor Antonio Meucci for "his work in the invention of the telephone." Meucci was an Italian-born inventor who immigrated to New York in 1850 and created some kind of device that enabled him to communicate between the rooms of his house. According to Fossella, Meucci obtained a caveat for his invention in 1871, five years before Bell and Gray, but he was too poor to renew the caveat.

"If Meucci had been able to pay the $10 fee to maintain the caveat after 1874," Fossella wrote in his resolution, "no patent could have been issued to Bell."

First, it would take decades to do it, since you would first have to repeal various sections of the current Constitution, which would take a 2/3 majority in EVERY state (think about the ERA.. if they couldn't get that through, how will they get much else through?). You can't just say "OK, this Constitution is toilet paper (though it would seem that the last three administrations believed such), let's start from scratch."

Second, almost nothing ever gets BETTER by scrapping it and starting over. Back during the end of the OJ trial, a lot of people wanted to change the Constitution to allow for less than a unanymous jury verdict to convict someone of a capital crime. Stuff like that SOUNDS good, until an innocent person gets caught up in it. Ditto with the attempts to curtail death sentence appeals to one or two. Think now of the dozens who have been found to be innocent in the past few years by DNA evidence. We can't just dig someone up and say "Oops... sorry about that.. but you WERE found guilty by a jury of your peers.."

Third, think of the total melee that would ensue in trying to put together the new Constitution... especially in the current political climate, where both ends of the political spectrum are eating their young.

My PC monitors a 2 KHz window from 14070.5 KHz to 14072.5 KHz

The software decodes the messages, and looks for a repeated call sign after the word "de". If it catches a callsign, the software reports this reception to the pskreporter map. The sending station then gets almost real time confirmation that they are "getting out".

Unless the stars talk back to you, it's completely different.

Uh, no Dave, it is a near perfect analogy. It is still the reception and confirmation of photons from a distant location, only the technology is different (and even less so if one is doing radioastronomy). You can nitpick this to death if you like, but most people are going to spot the similarities almost right away.

We need to get a framework in place now. It won't be much longer before the current mess devolves completely into an internet incited angry mob.

Jefferson said our government is impossible without rational and educated people. We are in a culture that eschews intelligence and is more religious (therefore less rational) than any other, save the radical Islamists.

Funny you should mention this....The NexStar by Celestron all have computerized motor drives that locate from a database with a couple of button presses. I was looking at the new scopes with my g/f (who is also a stargazer), recently, and she said, "doesn't this depend on whether the mount is set up correctly?"

Why, yes. Yes, it does.

Further, it takes exactly the same skills, and knowledge to set up the mount as it does to hunt the sky using charts and a timepiece.

When I set up my C8 (Starbright) in the deep weeds, away from urban light pollution, there is, indeed, a sense of discovery, and capture, when I find a deep sky object using simple math, and basic charts. More importantly, and this applies to a lot of technology driven activities, today, when the technology fails, no matter the reason, I can still soldier on, having fun getting it done, with no more difficulty than simply opening a chart.

In observing my friends' experiences, setting up the mount with a go-to is not too difficult. With a computerized go-to, the actual mechanical orientation of the mount and scope is no longer so critical. Once the scope is set up more or less level, you just aim it at a couple of bright stars with known coordinates, ID them to the PC, and the PC takes it from there. After that, you just punch in your object or choose from a menu, and the scope slews to the appropriate coordinates.

With my 18" Newt Dob it's even easier to set up (just plop the thing on the ground, align the optics and go), although searching for objects, and keeping them in the field at high power, contains the challenge. I could have gotten a nifty go-to drive for it, but opted instead for an equatorial platform, which now requires a bit more set-up (using 16th century technology - a compass, Polaris and good, old-fashioned experience ;-) but it saves tremendous trouble down the road - I still have to find the objects manually (a task which I love, a great feeling of accomplishment) but the drive keeps them dead center for several minutes running, a real joy. It is nice to gaze at that 8-billion-LY distant quasar at 600x without having to repeatedly nudge the behemoth along... :-)

Very Nice website, Francesco! :-)

So, when you sent your SWL card, the Fleet Operations Comamnder stamped it and returned it as a QSL? Good idea!

I'm a visual observer. I like the romance of real photons on my retina. There are lots of people out there who tinker with CCDs, and I appreciate what they do, but they don't need me joining in. I am simply not a high-tech-gadget guy.

I don't log these. I don't QSL them. I just noticed the catch on the pskreporter page. I only log real live QSOs. The autospotting goes on while I'm at work.

I really have nothing to prove to anybody. All the bad shit I said was gonna happen happened. I'm having a blast.

That's very quaint. There are objects way too faint to see in real time. Do you not try to image them? Film? CCD?

It depends what you want to do.

I think virtually all of the mounts designed for imaging include goto these days because some of the targets we image are too faint to be seen in real time with a transportable scope. It's not uncommon for me to need to take a couple 10-20 second exposures just to compose my frame.

While some goto scopes are not critical on polar alignment, (in fact many of them are alt-az instead of equatorial) the Astro-Physics ones pretty much demand you have a reasonably good polar alignment, because if you just do a multiple star sync and have the mount calculate things out you'll end up with field rotation if you're imaging.

An incredible advantage to goto is for public outreach. It's not fun hunting down an elusive target if you've got a couple dozen people standing around waiting. With goto, after everyone has looked, I can punch a few buttons and while the scope slews to the object I can tell them about the next object we'll be looking at.

The Dobsonian mount was a wonderful invention because it made useful scopes affordable and larger portable scopes possible, but even John Dobson tells people it has it's limitations. Haven't seen him in a couple years, but before he had a stroke, he was a regular visitor to the North East, and I'd usually run into him a few times a year. Last time he was out he helped a kid make a transportable 10" f8 dob with a mirror I got from North American Rockwell. It's a beast to use as things drift out of the field quickly, but the optics are incredible.

And to include some closer to on topic content - has anyone here experimented with using a slinky as a loading coil for a "portable" vertical antenna? If so, any thoughts on if it's worthwhile?

How 'bout we just cut off aid to Zionists? They are the main reason that the Arabs dislike us so much (that and the maiming and killing from drones, that and throwing hand grenades into apartments where there are grandparents and children) and we give them $5 Billion / year to bulldoze refugee camps.

That was discussed pretty much to death about a decade ago. And a dozen or so members tried it. With, as you'd expect, mixed results.

As a quick-deploy horizontal, a slinky does pretty well in the field. As a loading coil for a vertical, not so much. Largely because it needs a form to keep the coil stable.

I understand. I am just trying to figure out how the conservatives usually connect the dots on support of a Zionist state and simultaneous bias against Jewish people in America, where they have been for decades and have contributed hugely to our culture and society. America would not be the same without Irving Berlin and George Gershwin, or a host of other people who have helped define who we are in the US.

Would sheets of plastic inserted between the coils to prevent contact plus an overall clamp to maintain shape do the trick? Once done, it could be 'set and forget'...

I was thinking I could put it over a section of pvc pipe.

Or I may just buy a screwdriver antenna. Can't count on having trees to hang an antenna at a star party.

My AT-271 worked fine for RX, but now I'm doing the tx thing too.

Depending on power applied, within the slinky, you may have to deal with volume of dissipation in the coil. It's not a copper conductor. Nor is it uniformly round, which will make the areas of electric and magnetic field density vary around the surface of the conductor. And being a flat conductor will produce less effective skin conductivity surface than the equivalent cylindrical surface area. This will make capacitance distributed across the breadth of the coil a more significant issue, and, dependent on frequency, this could be a considerable tuning issue and SWL issue for the transmitter. An antenna tuner will help with the match, but losses in the antenna will continue to be losses, antenna tuner or not.

If losses are not a significant issue in your setup, then a slinky can be an adequate loading device. If losses will matter, then there are better solutions.

If I go this route, I'd be looking to stretch it out a bit so I can tap it at different spots for different bands.

I have an antenna tuner, but it sounds like it would make sense to pick up an antenna analyzer - on that basis I'll need to do more thinking.
Space is at a premium when I'm heading to star parties.

Then you'd want a broadband antenna. If you're VHF, a discone is a good broadband, and compact, solution for RX & TX. If losses are not an issue, an antenna tuner can match a VHF discone for HF use.

No we need honest DIVERSITY on the SCOTUS,

US President Obama [The White House] talked about Elena Kagan's "Life Experiences" as being a reason for her nomination : What "Life Experiences"

Elena Kagan has never been Married, had a 'domestic-partner' or even lived with someone.
She is simply a loner, self-centered and into herself : How does Kagan relate to real people who have lived real lives ?

Elena Kagan has never held a real world Job;
but always been a college student, college professor or university administrator, or a government employee; living off the tax payers.
-again- How does Kagan relate to ordinary people who have lived real lives with families, jobs, and taxes ?

Elena Kagan as a Women has never had Children

-again- How does Kagan relate to the vast majority of Women who have lived real lives with families, raising children, the need for abortion, and dealing with sexual abuse ?

Indeed - but it could have been any one of a number of oil companies, American too, whose well went bad - BP's number just came up this time...along with their American subcontractors Transoceanic and (cough cough) Halliburton.

FWIW, according to some sources, BPs quality control, here and in many other locations, is apparently lacking. They seem to have a corporate culture in which bending the regulations and tryig to fly under the radar with problems is rampant. They probably are not the only ones. This is probably an understatement. Nobody gets rich being honest anymore.

BP was slated to receive an award for it's environmental friendliness until Obiteme ordered it killed in the wake of this spill.

BP was to be recognized for it's environmental responsibility and exceptional safety record, with the fewest injuries, and lowest volume of oil spilled, over its history, in the industry.

BP is positively antiseptic compared to Exxon.

Do you still think BP deserves the award?

It is true that their record is good, and BP certainly trumpets this attitude in its ads, but former employees and inspectors, including some from Alaska, have suggested that BP cuts corners when nobody is looking. At least one former employee has suggested that certain mandatory high-pressure well tests, which are specified to last 5 minutes, were frequently shut off after just 30 seconds when inspectors were not present. With a behind-the-scenes operation like this, their safety and environmental record was a sitting duck.

There are also safety and equipment regulations present in other countries (such as certain kinds of pressure valves - sorry to be less than specific, but I think you kwow what I refer to) that the U.S. does not require. A company who prides itself on safety, with or without regulation, should employ these methods anyway.

It seems to me (and I would have to go looking for this information to verify it) that I have also read or viewed that Halliburton's concrete casements have been responsible for the large majority of failures of these structures in recent years; with a record like that, if I were an oil company concerned with safety and the environment, I would be very hesitant to use their services.

I am not sure how a company can anticipate the sudden presence of a large expansive methane bubble, but it appears that this was not an isolated incident and that they happen with some frequency. Proper outfitting and procedures - specified from the top down - probably could have avoided this problem.

Having said this, while I am strong believer in the buck stopping at the top, I think there is enough evidence that each player among the top three shares some responsibility. It would be nice if they could sort it out amicably among themselves, but in lieu of that, I suppose we'll have to go through a protracted process to resolve those proportionate shares.

More WLS facts?

Newser) ï¿½ As the Gulf of Mexico turns into an oil-slicked environmental disaster, BP is quick to point the finger at Transocean, the owner and operator of the doomed Deepwater Horizon. But, as the New York Times reports, the oil giant itself has a history littered with spills, blowouts, safety violations, and promises to clean up its act. ï¿½It is a corporate problem,ï¿½ says Rep. Bart Stupak, who will grill BP execs Wednesday. ï¿½Their mentality is to get in the foxhole and batten down the hatch."

Among infractions on BP's safety resume: a 2005 blast at a Texas refinery that killed 15 employees; a neglected pipeline that burst in 2006 and dumped 200,000 gallons of oil on Alaska's North Slope; and more than $550 million in safety fines in the years since, including 700 violations in the Texas refinery alone last year. Ironically, the Times notes the standard-bearer of industry safety: ExxonMobil, author of the 1989 Exxon Valdez disaster.

The cement failed its pressure test, twice. BP gave the OK anyway (after an alleged 3rd pressure test for which there are no records) to seal the hole.

Depends on the outcome of the investigation. BP did not own the platform, and was not exclusively involved in its maintenance and operation.

There are only two companies in the world that offers those services. One is Halliburton. The other is Schlumberger, which is not a domestically owned company, so environmental rules would be difficult to enforce.

That leaves Halliburton. There is no one else offering these services.

There is no way to specify from the top down, because, often the forces encountered are so far outside expectation, experience, or imagination, there is no specification. Mother nature in her fury is not something we can predict, nor manage. If we could, we'd be powering New York with lightning.

We've gotten so used to controlling natural events, as a species, that we sometimes forget that there are things outside our ability to control, outside our ability to manage, or even deal with.

Methane bubbles are the nature, and one of the great risks, of the oil business. I worked for a petroleum geologist some years ago. And I expressed these same concerns, and as an active broadcaster at the time (he owned the radio station) his interests were served in answering my questions. So he took me out onto the platforms where I was allowed to ask straight forward unvarnished questions from non-PR types...ie, working crew on the platform. Since he was a scientist and not a wildcatter, I got a nowhere near exposure than when I asked the same questions of those actively producing. One of my clients owns oil wells, and I get a lot of first hand, there, too. And it's a much different perspective.

The risks are enormous. And the forces being dealt with are equally enormous. And nearly impossible to predict. Even when estimates are expanded to 10 times expected pressures and more, they can be inadequate to what's really encountered. You must bear in mind that the technology is often developed on the spot in direct response to conditions that can't be predicted, and are fueled by Mother Nature's moods.

Companies like Red Adair came into being to bring solutions to wells that can't be controlled. Adair's solution is to dynamite them shut and destroy the well. A massive resort to violence. Because management is impossible.

It's a business full of risks. That's why there are only two companies doing it. Halliburton and Schlumberger. BP hires the best, with the best track record. That's Halliburton. Schlumberger does not have the resources, the experience or the ability to do what Halliburton does. Nor do they give enough of a shit about the consequences of an accident to put them in charge of such a well as Deepwater Horizon.

You should see a Schlumberger site. Halliburton's sites are surgical theatres by comparison.

But, again, we're dealing with Nature and her whims. Shit happens.

Nonetheless, BP has the best track record.

The award, had it been issued, would have been earned.

There's no doubt it's going to be a legal mess. And there's going to be a lot of punitive action clamored for. But likely, that will be politically motivated. Not equal to the actual damage.

But here's something that's not being discussed: The amount of this spill is about the same volume of petroleum that seeps into the Gulf through the silt, every day. And that seepage has been going on for centuries. The ocean, and nature have found a way to deal with that seepage. And a protracted oil slick hasn't developed from the hundreds of years of seepage in the Gulf.

Which goes a long way toward explaining that about 35% of the oil that's been spilled is no longer in the slick. It's already disappeared. Not just dissipated. Gone. It, too, has been gobbled up by the ocean. Some of it's settling out, and attaching to the silt, as with natural seepage. Some has dissipated. Some has been consumed by natural chemical processes, and some has been consumed by biological entities. All of which points to the growing understanding that the damage, as expected, will be less than predicted, with far, far shorter endurance than claimed.

The Exxon Valdez spill was supposed to have destroyed the oceanic environment for 100 miles around the spill for the next 150 years.

Today, it's a thriving aquatic environment, teeming with life. The oyster and crab beds are richer than ever, and the local lifestyle is better than before the spill.

Doesn't mean it wasn't bad. Just that it wasn't as cataclysmic as the hand wringers were claiming.

This one won't be either.

Last night I did some mw listening.
WOR was on 710. CFZM Toronto is on 740.
730 had a country music station I could not ID.
Also on 730 a French station and from time to time a Spanish station would fade in. Will listen to this frequency a bit more tonight.

Using a 3 ft box loop (home brew) facing N-S in SE Michigan. Any ideas on the 730 country music station?

Exxon Valdez Anniversary: 20 Years Later, Oil Remains Christine Dell'Amore
National Geographic News
March 23, 2009

Two decades after the worst oil spill in U.S. history, huge quantities of oil still coat Alaska's shores with a toxic glaze, experts say.

More than 21,000 gallons of crude oil remain of the 11 million gallons of crude oil that bled from the stranded tanker Exxon Valdez on the night of March 23, 1989.

The oilï¿½which has been detected as far as 450 miles (724 kilometers) away from the spill site in Prince William Soundï¿½continues to harm wildlife and the livelihoods of local people, according to conservation groups. (See an Alaska map.)

Dennis Takahashi-Kelso, who was on the ground at the Exxon Valdez disaster as Alaska's commissioner of environmental conservation, remembers wading through knee-deep pools of bubbling, thick oil. The smell of the pure oil was intense and pungent, he said.

When he returned to the same beaches years later, he found "surprisingly fresh" oil just below the sand.

(Related: "Alaska Oil Spill Fuels Concerns Over Arctic Wildlife, Future Drilling".)

"The damage that [the spill] created is something beyond anyone's imagination," said Michel Boufadel, Temple University's Civil and Environmental Engineering chair, who has just completed research on why the oil persists.

Oil-Munching Bacteria

An 11,000-person crew removed oil from the beaches until 1994, when government officials decided to end the clean up effort. At that time, what was left of the the oil was naturally disintegrating at a high rate, and experts predicted it would be gone within a few years. But they were wrong.

Oil naturally "disappears" through two processes: As the tide rises over an oil patch, the water sloughs off bits of oil, which then disperse into the ocean as tiny, less harmful droplets that can biodegrade easily.

Biodegradation occurs when bacteria or other microorganisms break down oil as part of their life cycle.

But Prince William Sound is what ecologists call a closed systemï¿½it's not exposed to big, pounding waves, so the oil has time to seep into the sand, according to Margaret Williams, who oversees conservation in the Bering Sea for the nonprofit World Wildlife Fund (WWF).

In these stagnant areas, oil-munching bacteria don't receive the nutrient-rich water flow they need to thrive, said Temple University's Boufadel.

"The assumption that oil is going to disappear is surprisingï¿½we have to put an effort into understanding oil spills and how they interact with the environment much better," Boufadel said.

Boufadel's research on the leftover oil was funded by the Exxon Valdez Oil Spill Trustee Council, a state and federal partnership to restore the damaged ecosystem.

Shangri-La of the North

Twenty years of oil exposure has injured this stretch of Alaska's coast, which WWF's Williams calls the Shangri-la of the north.

In its first toxic sweep, the oil spill killed about 250,000 seabirds, 4,000 sea otters, 250 bald eagles, and more than 20 orca whales, according to WWF.

Today, one of the orca pods that lost family members has not recovered.

Sea otters and harlequin ducks continue to die by digging into the sand for food and releasing buried oil.

At the bottom of the food chain, pink salmon eggs and small invertebrates such as mussels and clams are not yet back to their original population levels.

And local fishers, who lost more than U.S. $286 million after the herring fishery collapsed in 1989, are still waiting for the fishery to rebound.

http://www.investors.com/NewsAndAnalysis/Article.aspx?id=533718

The way to prevent this is a Republican majority in the 112th Congress. If the Dems keep their majority, you will see millions of folks pulling all their money out of their 401(k)s, taking the penalty haircut, and putting it where government goons can't steal it.

All those millions need to remember this in November.

Muslim Student Associations across America have one goal: the eradication of Israel and all Jews.

On Monday evening I gave a speech at the University of California-San Diego to counter a week of hate-filled events titled "Justice in Palestine Week" staged by the Muslim Students Association (MSA) and other groups on campus, including an address by notorious Holocaust denier and anti-Semite Normal Finkelstein.

I challenged a female student wearing the black and white keffiyeh favored by Palestinian terror groups, to condemn the Hamas terrorists, she tried to change the subject. But I interrupted her: "I am a Jew.
The head of Hizbollah has said that he hopes that we will gather in Israel so he doesn't have to hunt us down globally. For or against it?" She hesitated for a moment then responded, "For it." I proceeded to thank the student for attending the lecture and revealing to everyone the MSA's true intentions towards the Jews and Israel

Over 200,000 people have viewed the exchange on YouTube in less than one week. You can watch by following this link.

Liberty Net for Week of May 8-15

http://3950.net/2010/05/liberty-net-for-week-of-may-8-15/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE WEEKLY Liberty Net continues to offer some of the most interesting and thought-provoking QSOs to be found anywhere in amateur radio.

There was some intentional interference this week, but the illegal jammers got no takers for their obscene and illegal interjections, and soon dried up and blew away.

Hereï¿½s just a small sampling of the hot topics discussed this time:

ï¿½ Were programmed stop-loss orders the ï¿½mousetrapï¿½ that caused the sudden fall on Wall Street this week? (2 minutes)

ï¿½ With reference to the stock market free fall, why was the obviously false story concocted that a trader entered a ï¿½bï¿½ (for billion) instead of an ï¿½mï¿½ (for million) when entering a trade? (6 minutes)

ï¿½ Was the stock market drop in any way connected to Chinese hackers ï¿½ with Mark Faber predicting that China itself is due for a major economic crash in the near future? (18 minutes)

ï¿½ Only normal middle class people have an interest in stability and peace; all other groups ï¿½ the financial elite, the media elite, the military-industrial complex, even the alternative media ï¿½ have an interest in promoting chaos and conflict. (25 minutes)

ï¿½ Joe Lieberman has proposed legislation that would strip Americansï¿½ citizenship at the governmentï¿½s whim ï¿½ all they would have to do is declare you a ï¿½terroristï¿½ ï¿½ a label which could be based on nothing more than your opinions. (28 minutes)

ï¿½ As the Obama administration continues the police state legacy of Bush, police and federal agents are increasingly engaging in brutality and military-style assaults against innocent citizens. (45 minutes)

ï¿½ Could a proportional representation system break the stranglehold of the two corrupt political parties in the United States, and give smaller parties ï¿½ and non-party candidates ï¿½ a chance? (51 minutes)

ï¿½ If the Mestizo invaders from the south are ï¿½legalizedï¿½ and are able to vote themselves even more largesse and power over our society, America will be unrecognizable in just a few years. (56 minutes)

ï¿½ Apparently British Petroleum (BP) already has its attorneys travelling around the Gulf, offering $5,000 apiece to individuals and businesses that might be harmed by BPï¿½s spill ï¿½ provided they give up all future rights to sue for damages. BP attorneys were also busy getting signatures on ï¿½sworn affidavitsï¿½ from those who witnessed the event ï¿½ and they were required to sign before they were allowed to sign off their shifts and rest after the explosion. (1 hour 59 minutes)

Thanks to the dedication and hard work of N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR each week, you can listen and chat live via the Internet whenever the Liberty Net is on the air. And you can download the Net mp3 files right here at http://3950.net and listen at the office or in your car ï¿½ anywhere and any time you like. The Liberty Net is live every Saturday night on or around (with 10 kHz or so) 3950 kHz SSB, beginning at 10PM Eastern Time.

Unless I break out my big ass loop and go out on the deck - I'm not going to hear anything on 710 because of WLW. But I have been able to null them enough to send a report on the 710 freq. and received a QSL but that has been a while ago. All I have in my notes is that I received a QSL but I'd have too dig mine out and look through them.

730 takes me some work also - I've logged WPIT out of Pittsburgh during the day before and received a QSL. But like right now at 2405 UTC there is nothing there - I heard a tad of talking but not enough for it to be an honest verficiation IMO. Some days are better than others - but that is usually the way it is for me on 730 here in the Nati'.

At 0030 I'm starting to pick up traces of country music on 730. About a half hour earlier I had 740 Toronto in. I'm using the 200' W-E wire on 730, but at that frequency I'm not about to trust it's directionality.

I'd have to wait a bit before I could use the SR II, and not certain I'll stay up that late. SS is around 9 PM EDT here.

Ha! You're a "Triple D" viewer also. I'm going to watch the repeat of the shows - at either midnight or 1am. I keep waiting to see when they show his stops here in Cincinnati. Maybe a couple of months ago he visited this area and according to our local news he visited six or seven places. After the first stop, because of the huge crowd, they kept the rest of his itinerary {sp} quiet. Can't wait to see the shows from this area.

Back to radio, right now on 730 it is clearing up - this is on my outside antenna - don't feel like breaking out the loop tonight....at least not yet.

Peter, I'm curious. just where did you find all this info? I think you better check all your facts. don't follow the company line printed else where. and, BTW, Halliburton is based out of Abu Dhabi, and a badly run company. BP is only second to Exxon, on their safety/spill record. and,as for Adare, his use of explosive, depleted the oxygen on a well head. then the head was capped. it's the same way as done today. remember all the burning wells during the gulf war? blow and cap is faster and safer. as you said, i spent a few years in the oil fields over seas. my family has an interest.

Under ideal conditions (winter, low sunspots, no aurora borealis, no co-channel or adjacent QRM, low QRN, decent antenna and RX, etc.), which admittedly rarely exist, a 120 watt MW station could be received across the continent. Years ago, when the MW band wasn't saturated with signals, some DXers bagged fantastic low-power DX. If memory serves, a DXer in Australia heard 250 watt stations from the USA and South America.

I wonder what the BEST MW DX catches (pure distance, power vs distance, etc.) in history were?

AND WEBMASTER BRIAN J. BRUNS :
http://criminal-brian-j-bruns.blogspot.com/

Abusive transsexual BRIAN J, BRUNS aka BURNS aka "Bri", "Brielle" or "Brielle-Jillian", born on 06/24/81, a "registered sex slave: and owner/webmaster of the abusive AHBL ("Abusive Host Blocking is a CONVICTED FELON. (Felon Indictment # I-1577-02,S-2423-02 and

The AHBL SOSDG is allegedly "non-profit" but stops free speech, blackmails ISPs and defames people.
Bruns lies that the AHBL is non-profit. He hosted the sex pages of his master "Lady-Arielle" who offers one hour of her perversion for over $300,-- profit on the SOSDG server!
Bruns actually HACKED the computers of his former employer Access Highway (http:// accesshighway.com). Bruns was many months incarcerated and has a FBI file. Realists think that Bri (also called "the cheese") never will change but will go back to prison.

Bruns retaliates and smears peoples' names also in anonymous blogs.
These blogs contain also factual lies for which he can be sued. It wouldn't be the first defamation lawsuit brought against him.

They do run a kiloWatt daytime, so it certainly depends on when the switch to 127 Watts occurs.

They were still coming in decent after 11PM EDT local so they should have changed antenna pattern. But the way things go today there is no guarantee that it gets done. Who is going to complain?

I do think that there may be some benefit going non-directional in that they probably aim away from the lake with the daytime pattern.
Well, thanks anyway for the help. Now I want to see if I can ID the Spanish station that fades in and out on that frequency.

I don't think they change 'pattern' at all. They are non-directional. Perhaps someone else

You are probably right. I was thinking about some of the bigger stations that have to use multiple antennas to control their pattern.

I doubt that the station has enough money or need for any fancy antenna as I described. A single vertical probably does the job.

Was that WMIL Steve? No one responded when I said that's what they said, it was very clear so I know there was no mistake. I think (if I remember right from yesterday) from looking up that callsign that it said it was religious. After the commercial and callsign they went back to two guys talking and I heard enough to know they were talking scripture related jazz.

According to the FCC website, there is no such station as WMIL on AM.

at 0135 UTC May 16,2010 the same xmtr came on the air with a different live female operator.
She was responding to and giving commands open and close links to several other stations that I did not hear, and probably were not on the same frequency.

It sounded to me that she was simul-select on several different frquencies and did not know that 11230 KHz was connected into the circuit.

I did not hear any recognizable callsigns or tactical calls used.

To use an old term; This sounded to me like the "order wire" in a military, multi-channel, point to point, comm circuit that had mixed voice and data circuits.
I haven't heard anything like this on HF since the Vietnam era of the 1960's and 70's.

I enjoyed going to the Breezeshooters hamfest at the Butler Fairgrounds regularly until I moved to the West Coast 10 years ago. I really do miss it. It made for a nice laid back day in the country. Also, I seem to remember that the organizers really had a nack for picking the same day that a big thunderstorm would roll through.

I believe I ran across this station, or something very much like it, possibly on this freq, about a month back. Eventually, I think I heard an ID of some kind, but it was stated so rapidly it did not register.

I am in California; not sure of your QTH, so take this for what it's worth.

I was trying to find me a good freq list for the N.America BCB where you could just type in say 610 (which is what I was monitoring tonight) and it would give all the stations and formats along with link of said station. On 610 it was nothing but spanish. I have many of radio locator sites, but not one that is perfect IMO.

But somehow someway I ran into this site and for someone who "thought" he read everything there was to read on WLW - I was pretty stoked to find this because there were alot of radio facts I wasn't familiar with....I'm sure BA/Peter/Dave/Steve/Drifter along with a few others may have - but I didn't.

Here is a tiny blurb along with the link that I didn't have a clue on. Just TWO FREQS!?!?

In January 1922, only twenty-eight stations were operating. A month later, eight more stations were on the air. In March 1922, sixty-five stations were on the air, but if Crosley had waited one more month he would have had the company of 132 other stations broadcasting in America. Fast forward to the end of December 1922, and one would find 570 stations on the air.

To make matters interesting, all radio stations were on one of two frequencies. If they weren't at 485 meters, they were at 360 meters. By the fall of 1922, stations were allowed to spread out a little, but there still was confusion on the airwaves.

I am sure you know how fortunate you were to hear that, that's pretty cool IMO. In 97 I heard a numbers station where the gal coughed during the transmission - one of the "attencion" stations. I've read all kinds of pretty cool stories on stuck keyups for lack of a better word/ phrase. All cloak and dagger like....lol.

People talking in the background after the person transmitting thought they were done. You should fire that to the staff at Pop Comm and Monitoring Times. Good job, I'm envious.

One more good part. OK - I'm done:-)

Authorization to start building its 50,000 watt transmitter came on May 25, 1928. A little over four months later (October 4, 1928) the new giant transmitter was cranked up and started shouting at the world from Mason, Ohio..

The new power meant new transmitting facilities at Mason, Ohio.
Shortwave buffs please note that the station installed a pair of three hundred foot towers, six hundred feet apart, with the antenna stretched horizontally between the two on a north-south line. Whereas the 5,000 watt transmitter had been water-cooled, the 50,000 watt transmitter was also water-cooled, but the water was in turn cooled by five giant fans. As for coverage, both Washington, DC, and Jacksonville, Florida, said WLW came in as powerful as any local on the dial. WOR in New York complained a little. Said the New York station: WLW at 700 on the dial was causing a little interference with it at 710 on the dial. This was the moment in time that WLW became "The Nation's Station."

When the 1920's ended, DXing had ended for all but the newest radio listener. The listener wanted programs. The listener no longer was a member of the "Lightning Bugs." The lightning bugs had winked off. And what was left, was radio.

Below is a link leading to the signal meter readings shown on my new Tecsun PL-310 when receiving the AM broadcast signals of three different stations with known values of field intensity at the point of measurement.

For a check on FM broadcast field measurement I took the radio out in the middle of the street in front of my house, and with its whip antenna fully extended and in the vertical plane it read about 60 dBu (1 mV/m, if a field intensity) on a local station that uses a c-pol transmit antenna. It read about the same with the whip horizontal. The whip antenna was about 5 feet above the ground.

The expected field intensity from that station for the radiated power, transmit antenna height, path length and receive antenna height is about 12 mV/m, or 81.6 dBµV/m.

So based on the results above, my PL-310 does not provide even a roughly accurate measure of the MW/VHF field intensity that the radio is receiving (unfortunately).

I could not check the accuracy of the PL-310 metering on SW, because there is no way of accurately knowing the incident field from remote SW/HF transmit stations arriving at my receiving location.

Tell that to the cop.

Doubtful. Another example of Darwin's Law. I was amused because of the stupidity of his actions.

Moreover, a cop's "rights" in detaining a person that long are also questionable. There is a limit to how much is reasonable.

You're right, I should call him stupid. I don't have any information on his IQ. His judgment, however, is something else again. However non-stupid he may be, he did a very stupid thing, nonetheless.

I can't speak for Cuhu.

But James Madison certainly condemned democracy. So did Mencken and Saki and many others. And so do I.

If the majority is allowed to seize your property or make its opinions into law whenever it so chooses, how is that different from an autocracy? (With an autocrat, bad as that system is, at least you have a _chance_ that the ruler will be wise or benevolent or both. With democracy, there is no chance whatsoever.)

That is why the founders opposed democracy and gave us a constitution that would protect us from it, just as much or more as it protected us from would-be kings.

They tied down the government with the stringent chains of the Constitution, which, especially the Tenth Amendment, severely restricted the areas in which government could do anything at all.

But politicians, notably Lincoln and the Great War Criminal but also many others including G.W. Bush and Obama, have found that, through bluster, intimidation -- and packing the court (and the law schools) with those whose main goal was avoiding the founders' strictures -- they could get away with trashing the Constitution on almost every level.

The result is that we now do indeed have the "democracy" that the founders were trying to avoid; with the thoughtless majority easily manipulated into doing almost anything the ethnically distinct media masters want them to do.

The result is that we openly tolerate the invasion of our southern border while we slaughter innocents by the hundreds of thousands in the Middle East who never constituted even a slight threat to America.

The result is that we have a National Security surveillance state which arrogates to itself the right to "monitor" almost everything we say and do, and spy on our formerly private transactions and interactions.

The result is that we now have almost totally given up the right of freedom of association and must hire and buy and sell and send our children off to school all in accordance with our masters' latest arcane formulations based on the race and ethnicity of their "subjects."

The result is indefinite detention without trial.

The result is "extrajudicial rendition."

The result is Predator drone attacks on apartment buildings containing mothers and children.

The result is the openly admitted ordering of the assassination of an American citizen by one of those Predator drones.

Yes, I condemn "democracy" as it currently exists in the country which is, quite anachronistically, still called by the name "United States of America."

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

20 minutes? Are you kidding me?

Try an hour. One time I rented a car in Oklahoma. We drove it over to Arkansas to visit a friend. Upon returning, we got stopped by the Arkansas Highway Patrol who informed us, after giving him my Texas drivers license, that the rental car's Kansas plates were expired and did not come back registered to anyone or anything.

What a friggin mess. After he confirmed my story with all of the various agencies, he apologized and let us go on our way. These guys have jobs to do, just like you and I. It just involves more unpleasant interaction.

Gee... I hate to interrupt your lying pig shit, but the Constitution was created "In order to form a more perfect union" than had been possible under the "Articles of Confederation". Your ridiculous overemphasis of "states rights" is out of sync with known reality. Too much "states rights" was the _CAUSE_ of the creation of the Constitution, and it was ratified by the people WITHOUT any amendments. The initial amendments were actually 12, and the very first was an amendment that was to guarantee the increase in representation in the House of Representatives as the population grew.

One wonders when the lying and revisionist history from the rightarded will ever stop. It won't, of course. It won't stop because the lying is all they have. They constantly seek to redefine the Constitution as a vehicle to limit the power of the federal government when the actual reason behind the Constitution was to EMPOWER central government as controlled representatives elected directly by the people as opposed to having a lose confederation through the state legislatures.

> The result is that we now do indeed have the "democracy" that the http://www.greatervoice.org/econ/quotes/American_Republic.php -----

(This republicanism of the 1780's was not in principle different from what in Britain and America by mid-nineteenth century was generally called representative democracy. The founders would not have been opposed to modern connotations of the word "democracy", nor would they have used the word "republic" to mark out a distinction from those connotations. In scorning "democracy", eighteenth-century theorists had in mind Aristotle's picture of a heedless, emotional, manipulated populace that would still be denigrated by most modern democratic theorists).

But in this latter observation you might be correct. The advent of Faux Noise and other, round the clock, "noise machines" make it possible to "whip the mob into a frenzy", thus manufacturing opinion and driving the elected representatives to sort term, ill advised actions. In the latest incarnation, "pollsters" are employed to test and control the message in order to achieve the desired effects. The disinformation is published and then the "polls" are conducted to measure the efficacy of the messaging. When the disinformation is successful the polls then become a message in and of themselves to convince the public that those who "see things differently" are "ill informed".

I used to keep up on radio tech but haven't for years.

What is a good reasonable cost bedside receiver for SW use and maybe even ham, digital, etc?

Prefer a sleep timer as I like to get into bed and listen to radio with sleep timer on.... but the local AM/FM programming is crap!

I don't think there is such a thing anymore. Depending upon where you are, you can find several decent beside radios, but unless you have very specific things to listen to, and those things are the BBC, China (PRC) and a few others, you are never going to get the good clear signals to fall asleep to.

You will have to tune around, change freqeuncies and put up with noise interference and fading (even with a sync detector).

All of which make SWL'ing fun, but could never make me fall asleep.

Geoff.

Wow. Is battery life an issue? I just heard about a new Crane/Sangean powered speakers might work nice. Can you put up a full-size antenna?

Hi All,

Complete newbie here considering purchasing a shortwave radio, but since I've heard that sw's can have trouble picking up signals in NYC I want to get some info from the experts before I take the plunge.

I live in northern Brooklyn, NY, in a top-floor apartment that has roof access. There are really no buildings much taller than mine in the area (save Manhattan across the river, of course). So I'm wondering, can I expect much success in picking up shortwave stations, and if so, what do you think is the cheapest model I could get away with for my area and still expect decent results? I know that sw involves some work and hunting, which I'm prepared to do, I just don't want to be completely out-of-luck.

Let me know how you think I should proceed.

Much thanks in advance!!!

No battery life not an issue... but just didn't think the review on some of the portable units was very good....hence maybe the desktop model?

Cant put up an outside antenna.

However S meters don't really measure the actual field intensity that the receiving antenna is "immersed" in.

They just provide a relative indication of the voltage present at the antenna input terminals of the receiver -- which is not a field, but a conducted r-f voltage that depends on the real gain and physical orientation of the receive antenna, frequency, impedance matching, cable losses and other factors.

It's flat, and is covered in a semi-soft, rubberish substance. Don't know about what's underneath (if that matters).

A metal roof would be best to avoid interference from inside the apartment. Not a necessity though. The main thing is you are pretty much in the clear to receive shortwave signals and also in the clear to receive interference from outside sources.

You might want to get your hands on a cheap portable shortwave and check for these sources. You could have a problem from electrical wires. Also computers, tv's, etc. in adjacent apartments are potential sources of interference. Try to find the most quiet spot to erect an antenna.

You could put up a piece of pvc pipe and hang an inverted vee from it. Or to be safe, (see last comment), put supports in two corners and hang a dipole in between. Do a search for hf antennas and you will find a lot of information. All you really need is a piece of wire that is insulated from its supports to connect to your radio. This will get you started.

The main thing is - whatever you do, don't tear a hole in that roof membrane.

Cheap SW radios have a nasty tendency to be easily overloaded by high level VHF signals (such as TV and FM eminating from the ESB, in most likely direct

Well, I guess the first question to ask is: What is the budget for the

Oh, and the sandbags are a good idea to keep a support in place while

I was hoping to spend a max of $150 or so. Is that too low a buy-in for the kind of equipment I'd need? If so, bummer.

For a $150 price point, you can't get a lot in the way of a new radio, but there are a lot of good radios that can be found for that or less on the used radio market. Ebay is a good source, but you should check with some of our regulars about any sellers you're looking at. Also, good radios turn up here in this NG from time to time.

That is pretty low. You could get a good portable. The Sony ICF-SW7600GR is about $150. There are others.

I would try to find someone with a good shortwave radio they could bring over and test at your apartment and determine what types of interference are present. That way you can figure out if a portable will fill your needs. You may need a radio with a noise blanker if there is serious power line noise. That would take the radio out of the price range you are considering.

FWIW, VoR switched back to Spanish during the 0200-0400 period on 9735 kHz again tonight after only three nights in English. Oh, well - a mistake? A test? A power struggle between the two mighty Western Hemisphere languages? The world may never know... ;-) Whatever it was, VoR came in better in English than at almost any other time ever...

Hi Daniel and welcome to RRS :-) You'll definitely get alot of help and recommendations from everyone here. Brenda Ann said something that is so true, don't get something cheap (radio wise.) It will just ruin your radio experience and IMO by newbies going that route - they quickly gave up on the hobby.

I can tell you from my personal experience, with the setup of you living on that top floor and having access to the roof - you could really put together a nice setup.

As for your radio, it all depends on how much jack you want to spend. If money isn't much of an obstacle go with maybe an Icom R-75 to start out, or any of the nicer tabletop models. Worse case scenario, you give the hobby a try and don't like it or it just isn't your bag.....then you can always sell your piece and you haven't lost a thing.

If you don't want to spend that kind of money, there "are" workarounds so too speak. There are all kinds of accessories that can aid in cleaning up a signal too. You can purchase a nice portable receiver, I have a couple and they do come in handy when or if you want to get away, and trust me - if you get into the hobby and enjoy it....there WILL be times where you want to get away from any RFI (interference) and you'll flip when you see the difference. It will almost make you want to build a small cabin (I did) or go to the beach or park and have a ball.

But one of the most important things is your antenna. It could be as simple as running fifty feet of wire and coupling it to your whip antenna or buying one ready made that is cut for all the bands or specific bands of your liking. But with you having access to the roof...yeah baby...you could have a badass setup if you wanted. Welcome to the hobby and read read read read and you'll learn alot. Good luck and let everyone know what you chose to do. :-)

The problem is that a really cheap radio will create it's own interference sources through overloading and IM.

Tell ya what... if he wants it, I have a little 9 band pocket radio I'll send him. That's a cheapy that if it does nothing, it can be tossed in the bin and fogotten. If he can hear any SW on it, then he'll for sure be able to hear it on something like the Sony.

A note about Moldova: per NASWA there a no current broadcasts from Moldova itself. but rather Pridnestrovie, which has a separatist government since Sept. 2, 1990. Reception in or after December 1993 count as Pridnestrovie, and prior as Moldova.

It is not certain as to whether any broadcasts ever really emanated from what is now considered to be Moldova (transmitter site: Kishinev), but if one has a QSL from Radio Moscow with the transmitter site as Kishinev prior to December 1993 it counts as Moldova.

You're just a garden variety old fart.

Liberal democracy is a form of representative democracy where elected representatives that hold the decision power are moderated by a constitution that emphasizes protecting individual liberties and the rights of minorities in society, such as freedom of speech and assembly, freedom of religion, the right to private property and privacy, as well as equality before the law and due process under the rule of law, and many more.

Such constitutional rights, also named liberal rights, are guaranteed through various controlled institutions and various statutory laws. Additionally the constitution of most of the contemporary liberal democracies protects the rights of individuals and minorities, and prohibits the will of majority (majoritarianism), by almost eliminating that rule in practice.

Some would argue that liberal democracy isn't democratic or liberal at all. They would argue that "liberal democracy" does not respect majority rule, except when citizens are asked to vote for their representatives, and also that its "liberty" is restricted by the constitution or precedent decided by previous generations. They would argue that, by prohibiting citizens the right to cast votes on all issuesï¿½especially for serious subjects like going to war, constitutional amendments or constitution abolishment etc.ï¿½this turns "liberal democracy" into the precursor of oligarchy.

Others would say that only a liberal democracy can guarantee the individual liberties of its citizens and prevent the development into a dictatorship. Unmoderated majority rule couldï¿½in this viewï¿½lead to an oppression of minorities.

The concept of an open society is closely related to liberal democracies. Since many liberals see democracies with strong statist reflections through the public choice theory as slow, dogmatic, conservative and not too apt for change, the liberal democracy contrasts with what could be called the "statist" democracy in that it emphasizes the civil society as the engine of its public discourse and development further.

Thanks, this is all very interesting! So the actual current name per the prov. gov't is Pridnestrovie (fun to pronounce!); and in fact the radio "station" name includes that name also - but the listings in Eibi, HFCC and etc. still list Moldova. Must be 'cause it's easier to spell. Well, at least a QSL from that location yields another NASWA country, so no harm, no foul :-)

Ditto here, although Chinese Radio Whatever + Firedrake certainly fills up the airwaves 24/7, and Cuba is ubiquitous much of the day and downright obnoxious on 25 and 49 meters. I'd rather have them ease back a bit and let others through; I don't miss nonstop VoA / RM / BBC...

Yeah, but Dave, really - who wants to hear anything 24/7?

Like I mentioned in another post, the "hunt" is a big part of the fun.

Now, there's something we definitely agree on.

There would be extremely vociferous opposition to any intelligence test -- or even the simplest civics test -- as a requirement for voting, however.

Even a literacy test would be verboten in the insane asylum that passes for the United States these days.

The reason? Any such test would be condemned as "racist." Certain races would fail even the simplest test in disproportionate numbers.

So, until reality hits us in the face hard enough to make us abandon the religion of racial equality (which is just as kooky as fundamentalism), we will continue with a system in which vicious gangsters and borderline morons barely able to dress themselves have an equal vote with honors graduates and brilliant inventors.

Of course, reality _will_ hit us in the face eventually, since the morons and thugs are increasing their percentage of the population every hour. And it is, more and more, _their_ tastes and predilections and "culture" which shape our society, determine its policies, and select its leaders.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

The property requirement was effectively a proxy for education and culture -- as well as a bar against mob rule and against the have-nots being used to plunder others via the ballot box.

Later, many states instituted literacy and simple civics tests for voting, without which representative government is much less free, workable, and honest. They were all struck down in the so-called "Civil Rights" power grab. They should have been made more stringent instead.

Some of them were. But since they are genetically, biologically, and cerebrally virtually indistinguishable from the Anglo-Saxons and Celts who formed the American people, their addition to our culture and gene pool did not result in any long-term degradation, endangerment, exploitation, hatred, resentment, or any other kind of incompatibility.

This doesn't mean we should hate or harm those who are incompatible. We should just realize that we should go our separate ways, and support their self-determination and freedom from the Evil Empire. The Republic of Lakotah is a first step. Perhaps the Tea Parties are -- as Pat Buchanan says -- the faintest beginnings of a second.

With my best,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

And yet, each came to polarize countless millions by contributing negatively as individuals in the name of their ethicities.

The reason we used to, and many times still do, think of the Irish, the Italians, and the Poles as thugs is not because of the millions who aren't, but because of the some who were.

Irish thugs built the Railroads from East to West, the Chinese Coolies built the Railroads from West to East.They had some Railroad Cars of ill repute hooked up to some (or all) of those Choo Choo Trains.''Cat Houses'' they were.

I have a couple of cheap small AM/FM/Shortwave radios I bought new for $10.00 each.I will send one of them to him free of charge and I will pay the postage to send it too.But, if he wins some money in that Cash Cab, he has to split half of it with me.

And such is the case with those who come today. Our experience with the past, which you have pointed out, should enlighten us to look at the doughnut and not the hole. I do not hold all of the Italians accountable for the actions of a Capone, nor do I hold every Mexican national accountable for the violence of a handful of drug lords. I know too many people of Mexican descent who are smart, hard-working, solid citizens who love their families and contribute to their larger communities...In other words, good Americans...to ever make that mistake. I am proud to call a number of them my friends. Same with Asians and blacks - it's the doughnut and not the hole that counts.

Believe me - there are cultural mores from other lands with which I have a lot of trouble. For that matter, our American culture has quite a bit of it. Characteristics of cruelty, injustice, and various forms of dishonor accompany most cultures on this planet, and the only thing anybody can do is push forward to encourage the best and forego the worst. No matter what, the pressure against our borders will not diminish, and it is obvious that trying to inculcate foreign peoples with our own POVs has proven to not be very successful even in this age of instant internet. Experience has shown that there is a far greater chance of immigrants assimilating once they get here rather than trying to do it from afar. What would be the most helpful is if we could establish a policy whereby we encourage those who come here legally and learn to be Americans to find ways to bring the positive aspects of our society back to their native lands. That's a very tall order, but eventually, if population continues to explode as it now does, there will be no other choice.

Meanwhile, it would be very helpful to get our own house in order.

I agree, and would add that both the manufacturer and end user must be willing to make and accept a product that is both reliable and reparable. The easy abundance of "throw-away" goods from overseas has made us not only wasteful but also too willing to accept inferior junk that cannot be renewed.

But it needs very careful handling. This is the same system Confucius recommended. And what happened was the corruption of the test taking process in favor of the kin of those giving out the test.

And given the control by corporate mass media, no way could we ever get a majority to install some test of sanity and competence. But... what you can do is look for those areas which already have higher standards, then move and invest there.

Look for an area, like my neck of Ozark woods, which still has family farms rather than agribusiness. As the Founding Farmers understood, if you can properly manage land, you can also evaluate policy. The schools here still work.

Get out an Atlas, and look up the hill towns north of I-40 between I-540 and US 65. They are all small towns like Alma, Bee Branch, Clinton, Deer, Eureka Springs, Flippin, Greer's Ferry, Heber Springs, Jasper.... then go to http://normessasweb.uark.edu/schoolperformance/School/School.php and see ZERO rates of violence. Dropout rates in the single digits. Graduation rates over 90%. (last year Jasper had 100%, and the year before Deer did) Attendance at 95%, and this is with all the kids tested. They dont take the kids with ADD, ADHD, Autism or whatever out of the testing cause... they dont have any.

The population is 99% "white". but when you look closer, you find out it is really most people are 1/3-1/2 Cherokee. The original Pioneers were Scots and Irish, who knew a thing or two about how Christian aristocracy dispossessed farmers. So, when the Cherokee came thru on the "trail of tears" many were taken in, and this hybrid, is still here in the farming and other business.

We'll see in a few days whether these people are stupid and uninformed or not when I go to trail, trying to have a medical marijuana test case on Friday. I've been passing out fliers (http://daybrown.org) showing how they've been running the drugwar like a speedtrap, using it to bust landowners for pot they didnt know was on their land.

This is a rural area without broadband, so I'll be out there again today passing out fliers. One side shows how the corporate mass media makes money selling pills for transnational pharma, so they will never report on the medicinal use of marijuana cause that would dramatically cut into profits. We havta get that word out online or with fliers.

Competent public schools and a "truth to power" tradition in the mass media are essential to a healthy democracy. There are way too few station owners. Way too few cable companies.

I don't advocate an actual test.

One of the many shallow statements that sound good-- if you don't stop and think about it-- is that "at some point, you have made enough money."

The key word in this statement, made by President Barack Obama recently, is "you." There is nothing wrong with my deciding how much money is enough for me or your deciding how much money is enough for you, but when politicians think that they should be deciding how much money is enough for other people, that is starting down a very slippery slope.

Politicians with the power to determine each citizen's income are no longer public servants. They are public masters.

The president warns us that Americans must beware of "the craziest claims" and "arguments" in which "information becomes a distraction" that puts "pressures" on "our democracy." What was behind Barack Obama's recent remarks to the graduating class of Hampton University? What "information" must Americans fear?

FCC Chief Diversity Officer Mark Lloyd http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/individualProfile.asp?indid=2411 foretold Obama's meaning in a coauthored 2007 Center for American Progress (CAP) report. The report complained that 91 percent of talk radio is conservative and praised the "more balanced" programming "in markets such as New York and Chicago." The deep blue demographics of two of the bluest American cities betray a deceitful usage of the term "more balanced."

To further corrupt the meaning of "balance," even after admitting that "no matter how the data is analyzed," conservative talk dominates "over and over again," the CAP report implied that talk radio balance means half conservative, half progressive programming. This is instructive. Although twice as many Americans self-identify as conservative versus liberal, the liberal meaning of balance mutates from allotment according to real-life proportions to equal market share. Armed with any redefinitions required, FCC Chief Diversity Officer Lloyd is now in a position to rebalance political talk radio.

To understand how "balance" could be achieved, we refer again to President Obama's warning that Hampton graduates must avoid information that becomes distracting. Precisely how can one recognize distracting information? A clue lies in the CAP report's insistence that broadcast companies serve "the listening needs of all Americans." The key word is "needs." Liberals assume that people should need only the information that liberals want people to have. Other information constitutes "distraction."

But when huge majorities of customers support existing talk radio programming, there exists only imaginary distraction. Only the most microscopic gap could exist between demand and supply. Such unpleasantness doesn't faze progressive know-it-alls unable to accept that customers recoil from force-fed progressive talk.

Undeterred, Lloyd and the other coauthors of the 2007 CAP report recommended a force-feeding technique that requires "diversity" in radio station ownership in order to inflict repeatedly rejected progressive viewpoints on the people. As I reported last August, diversity would be achieved through three actions.

The design of the US Constitution prevents mob rule by SLOWING heated populism. The current US Senate and the unrepresentation of the common people in the House, actually STOP any progressive actions as opposed to slowing them down. The TwoParty rule that has emerged over the last 100 years results in bipolar government of the worst kind. It is reactionary and vile.

Those who assert that the United States was to be the bastion of a new nobility with inherited privilege are enemies of the people.

That's insane. There have NEVER been any Jewish gangsters, criminals or pimps/pornographers. The Supreme Court will be soon passing legislation to prevent any of these ill-founded slurs against G_d's Chosen People.

Not a moment too soon, I would think. It makes perfect sense. If you have within you a bit of the Divine Spirit, you can NOT sin. The very nature of Divinity prohibits it.

G_d can not offend G_d.

I live in manhattan, without roof access (well, without authorized access, anyways). You can pick up lots of stations here with just a good portable and 20 feet of wire strung outside the windows. And in Brooklyn, you'll have less interference.

Moreover, since you have roof access, you have lots of options on how to place your antenna, which, if you start with a portable, need only be wire clipped to or wrapped around the radio's whip antenna.

More NYC SWL questions? Just ask. But if you decide to put an antenna on the roof, be sure to protect against lightning. It wasn't too long ago that some dope downtown got fried because he went up on his roof to "enjoy" a thunderstorm.

I dont blame you; tests have been fudged. However, there's nothing to prevent you from finding other honorable talented people to work with and find real solutions. Rather than telling others how to live, show them with the way you and your associates live.

Something under the radar, that I notice reading Cosmopolitan and Glamour magazines, is that thirty-something white career women, no longer hot and sexy, are giving up on ever meeting Mr. Wright, and going to fertility clinics. They wont get the perfect marriage, but with the support of their families and friends, do get the perfect baby.

Who will no doubt not grow up stupid and uninformed. But look at it more closely and see it is EUGENICS. Only under the control of women, not men. This has been going on long enuf now that some of these kids are already in grad school, having received full scholarship every step of the way.

The first generation of Uberwench. Next question: in the name of equal opportunity, are fertility clinic services going to be funded for poor women of all races? If so, it'll dramatically reduce the number of the stupid and uninformed, and thereby stabilize the democracy.

You may ecounter some RF interference from being in close proximity to the Empire State building. Also,Cablevision and Time Warner cables may cause serious buzzing in occasionally extreme cases. J&R on Park Row is a decent place to start shopping for an entry level receiver. And you will actually find a knowledgeable sales person , unlike R.Shack!

I beg your pardon - I know quite a few career women in their 30s and 40s who need not bow to anyone! And many of them even have naturally-

I have a radio similar to that one somewhere in my closet. It is what it is. I would hope he would start out with something better than that. Just call that radio "overload city" if he throws ten feet of wire on it. Just my opinion.

that when she said "Tell ya what" etc. I sensed her 'tude' - - and I ROTFLMAO - - please don't accept that radio. ;-) BA threw one my way once (still have it- sitting on a shelf)...lol...it's like a toy for a eight year old. On the other hand, go on and send it to him Brenda and he'll never listen to shortwave again. What did you do -- -- get a gift bag with a bunch of those? FWIW though, I'll never get rid of it.....just because. :-)

OK. I cleaned out my mini barn on the back part of my property. It now looks like what I wanted when I had it build. I've got two shelves up and I'm going to add six more throughout the area.

It is now primed and ready for me to bring some of my equipment out there. I brought out the lasy susan table and my GE P780 and later today I'm going to bring the DX398 out there. I have my Pop Comm / MT mags - my killer rocking chair :-) - I've been having fun.

Even though I live in a pretty good area whereas there isn't much RFI to deal with, I did notice a big difference just being roughly 70 ft. away from the house.

OK - here is the question. With the GE and even the 398 I suppose. I ran a length of 12 gauge to my AD DX Sloper with a alligator clip and ran it back to the GE. My thinking was that I could couple that to both of my radios that way, which I did with the GE already- along with having my loop out there. Will this work? I noticed a big difference out there, but I was only out there for maybe 45 minutes and it was around 5pm - so I don't know if the radio came alive just because I was away from everything or because I hooked up to the antenna. Any comments would be appreciated.

No, what the Eugenics types do is to fully Fund Abortion Clinics for Poor Women of All Races.

Daniel Salas,

30 years ago Shortwave Radio may have been the only way to go for directly from-the-source International {Foreign} News and Information.

Now you have better options in Internet Radio and Satellite Radio especially in major US Cities where the RFI/EMF Levels have multiplied in the last 30 years to the point that Shortwave Radio signals are often below the the exceeding high noise levels of the urban environment.

I am just suggesting it as a throw away test unit to determine if he can receive anything up on the roof. Can use it for interference source hunting too. If someone can send him a cheapie they have, so much the better.

As a poor person financially who totally opposes what the billionaire media and corporations are doing to our world and who has sacrificed a great deal for taking that stand, I certainly can't be accused of being a shill for them.

But doesn't your moral statement above require a commissar or committee to decide what my -- and my family's -- "needs" are?

I do not wish to live under such rulers, who would be no better than the current oligarchs.

And, in fact, it is quite natural for superior men and women to create and amass more than they can currently use. This is the basis for leisure time, and without leisure time, and the freedom it brings from Man's constant scrambling for the necessities, there would be no philosophy -- or art -- or science.

> and Unamerican.

What a bizarre claim. Washington and Madison and Jefferson wouldn't, I think, have concurred.

However, we may have some points of agreement.

The state-chartered corporation is an unnatural power-entity, created by government-granted privileges given to impersonal agglomerations of people who usually are impelled to act, robot-like and without conscience or responsibility, as merciless profit-seekers -- sometimes even to the point of destruction of the nation and people which gave the power-entity birth. If individuals acted that way, we would call them deranged criminals and sociopaths.

Many on the newsgroups think that "democracy" or (holding my nose as I say it) "economic democracy" or, among a few authoritarian types, "rule of the working class" is the solution to misrule by international corporations.

There's no need to refute such arguments with graphs and proofs and historical examples -- though that could be done.

The plain fact is that neither "the working class" nor "the majority" is _ever_ going to rule _anything_.

To prove this, all you have to do is look at them -- up close.

Just go to a place where everyone has to go, like the grocery store or the DMV, and take a good look at the people in line. Wal-Mart is a good place for observation too.

Ignoring the extremes of society's higher strata and the obviously deformed, try to see them in the average -- the majority. Open your eyes and your mind and see what most of our modern "consumers" and workers _actually look like_.

Look at the clothes they wear and the ways they disfigure their bodies. Look at their physical condition. Look at the "foods" they voluntarily consume. Look at the things they read, if they read at all. (The most popular items, except perhaps for Bibles and pornography, are placed in the check-out lines.) Listen to their chattering.

Such people are never even going to rule _themselves_, much less a society.

So mass "democracy" will always be a means by which the votes of such thoughtless beings are harnessed by clever liars with their own agendas.

Our current rulers, in short, _love_ "democracy" for that very reason.

Escape from the current oligarchy can come only from a new elite with different values -- and high biological quality.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

The granddaughter of crime boss and murderer Meyer Lansky (whose operations, in part, funded the Jewish "Anti-Defamation League" [ADL]), Mira Lansky Boland, is, interestingly enough, the ADL's "liaison to law enforcement" and one of their chief "fact-finders." She's also worked for the CIA and the Department of Defense.

When I sued the District of Columbia for sending a government thug to beat me up during a peaceful protest in 1990, she was there, taking notes, officially as a friend and legal advisor of the thug.

Gregg. I have to go with Dave on this. the 398 has a lose front-end, and almost any bit of wire over 20 ft. will give you trouble. i would say the less hash is your big winner. that sloper is a real keeper, but I would try your set-up on a few desk tops. I believe you will see a bigger difference, from the house out there. it's like going from a random long wire, to a good loop. you really don't receive more, you just "hear" more. a lot of those low signals have always been there, but now they kind of jump out at you. sounds like a cool set up. is your barn dry? if you keep your receivers there, ya gotta watch the humidity. and don't forget the winter cold, ya don't want to kill a good receiver. have fun.

SO.... if "you" can determine how much is enough, then you Naturally will also determine how much LOVE is enough and take the love from someone with too much and redistribute it to someone with too little?

I have used my DX-398 (Radiolabs mods) with my Alpha Delta DX-ULTRA and a 60-foot wire outside, with lots of MW blowtorches nearby (like 2 - 50 kW stations within 2 miles on salt flats and another 5 miles away or so, plus several others not far), and on SW anyway, it is no worse than any other radio. They all get some level of images below 3.5 MHz, bit nothing serious above. If I got even ten miles away from this crummy place, most of that would cease too.

The 398, for real signals, leaps ahead dramatically with an external wire or active antenna. The built-in whip is too weak - because, as I understand it, Sangean places a resistor either in series with the darn thing, or across to the ground, either of which is a dumb idea and both of which are bypassed by the external antenna socket(s) :-/

Nonsense. Restricting people's freedom to acquire as much wealth as they want (unless obtained through criminal activity) is immoral and Unamerican, and reeks of the typical jealousy of success exhibited by

People can make all the money they want, as long as they pay their fair share of taxes. The wealthy pay way less, as a percentage of their income, as any other demographic. Going after the Swiss banks is a good start.

Dave, i believe he has the super 398. I'm not sure what all the mods are from radiolabs. but, Bruce is not the first person to state this.
i guess they do something on the front end of this port. if it behaves on the DX-ultra, it's doing great. i have one here in a tight inverted V , and it works super.

What I think he means is, that American Dynasties based on wealth come ominously close to European Dynasties (or any other dynasties in liberty-regressive nations) based on wealth, or power, or inherited status. Ultimately, at their core, is the concept that one family group amasses and maintains potentially undue power over others through whatever means is at their disposal (in this case money and political connection), and this is not at all what the Forefathers had in mind in their Cradle of Liberty.

Having said that, I do have a soft spot for the Rockefellers - were it not for very altruistic latter generations of that family, we would have neither Acadia National Park nor the Jackson Hole district of Grand Teton National Park - both near and dear to my heart.

EQUATORIAL GUINEA, Radio Africa, 15,190 kHz, two dates, 11 April 1935z and 30 April 2145z, 2010 (one card each date). Almost full data cards, no signature or TX power, "Radio Africa" with photo of serious-looking gentleman (Station manager in GUE?) standing in front of R. Africa transmitter. Also cover letter, station info and sked :-) For reception reports by mail and by e-mail to Equatorial Guinea (+ $2 on the letter), sent from HQ in one envelope in Pleasanton, California.

I am quite happy about this one :-)

The City of Angels (Los Angeles,California, there is another Los Angeles in South America too) used to have a fine Trolley Car system many years ago.Along came that damn Rockefella SOB and he had those Trolley Car Rails ripped from the streets of the City of Angels.

I have a soft back book here which I bought at the Books A Million Book store on I-55 North Frontage Road a bunch of years ago.That Book is all about the American Trolley Cars with a lot of photos too.Some of those old American built Trolley Cars were sold to South America.They, or some of them, are still running in South America.

To HELL with those damn Rockefellars!!!

Huh? Then you've never heard of the infamous (and notorious) Purple Gang?

Well, I'll have to see more, like I said I just started out there and don't even have an hour in yet. But from the little time I clipped on with the GE I didn't noticed any overload, we'll see. I did get a station out of Beckley {sp} Bexley W.Va - I forget what freq. though but I have it wrote down out there.

I'll have to check on the 398 overloading, I know for a fact it would have when I bought it new because it did in here (house) - - but after Radio Labs did their mods I have been able to use it with the sloper with no problem so far. I don't really use the 398 as much as I should, I bet I don't have twenty hours of listening on it. Not that I don't like it, I just have other receivers I use....every receiver has its niche and it just seems the 398's isn't here in the house - but out there in the barn it'd be fine because of the portability.

I don't have electric out there but I've thought about it for years and now that I cleaned it up a bit - I may consider that...it would be sweet. As for any leaks - not a one- but the shingles should be redone in the next couple of years. But I definitely won't be in there once the temperature goes up, but for now or while it's cool outside at night - - I like it and I do bring my radios in with me when I'm done.:-)

Exactly Bruce. I just don't understand why these companies don't do it right the first time. IMO- both the 398/909 and the DX394 were basically nothing I could use when I bought them new and actually I thought there wouldn't be much of a difference, but what a difference those receivers are now with all the mods.

No. Every name you mention was FRAMED by anti Semitic IRISHMEN. They even went to the extremes of getting circumcised to get the needed realism. It's like having phony ID.

That way, if they were ever asked to drop their pants while in a line-up, there could be NO denying the obvious ethnocentric connection.

G_d's Children were and always will be, BLAMELESS.

Question Bruce or Steve or whoever. Is there a part of the WRTH (that they don't show on the link) where you can just go to the freq and look up who is on there and at what time like the Passport? I have been trying to use the WRTH link - but I find myself looking everywhere at times and getting cornfused.

Really Kevin? What exactly did he do - if I may ask. That's why I would never attend a "peaceful" anything when it comes to stuff that has to be protested...lol. I would still be in a federal prison after breaking his arm or putting five and a half inches of cold steel in his ass.

Can you guess how/why Wall Street got it's name?
I am watching the History channel program, The Pig.
People in Manhattan built a wall to keep out wild rampaging Pigs,,, Wall Street.

According to what the guy on the History channel program said.

Pig Street.

There used to be some Pig Sandwich eat joints around here.One of them was at Mart 51 shopping center on Terry Road.

Pig Meat Martin, the musician guy.

Gregg - for this use (by order of increasing frequency) I usually use the Eibi or Aoki listings in that format. Readily available at those respective websites; holler if you need a link. Aoki is updated daily. Prime Time Shortwave has the same format for English-only.

There are some downloadable programs available on the Eibi site that will render a spreadsheet you can use to give you this format. My PC is removed from my radio, so not real useful to me.

Seems I have also seen a website on which you can plug in a freq and it gives you back a complete listing of what's on-the-air at that moment. As above, not really useful for me, but you may like it.

Can you hear me Bruce if I holler here from Ohio? :-) I would definitely like the format that I am so use to...the PTWBR - I'm just use to it. I was going to get the WRTH but then when Steve so nicely provided those links - I felt I was getting turned around so too speak.

I'm really not looking for a spreadsheet though Bruce, but if you can provide a link it would be greatly appreciated, I like the idea of what you said there in the last two sentences, that would be freeking ideal. I'm still going to pu the WRTH just to have it in front of me, many times (at least for me) if it's in my hands I can figure it out easier than the formatting via the web. So yeah, I'm hollering - - -
"HELP ME HERE IN THE NATI'!!! :-) Still, thanks for link Ace - just another tool to use.

Ha! It's cool Cuh, not that there aren't critters around (because there are) but I've never seen a rat in my area before. Lots of coons / bunny wabbits / squirrels / some kittie cats. But I have to say, the barn/shed was built like freeking Noah's Ark, if you can overdo a small area like that....IMO it was overdone and I literally paid for it $$$ - but that's cool. I'll measure it today so you guys have a better idea, it's not a big space, but it was built like a mini barn - but not as big as a barn - follow me? But definitely more than enough room to store my extra kitchen set / ladders/shovels etc. stuff like that.

No doubt Bruce. I did my own little mod myself after they returned it.
On the tuning knob, I used the cap of some tuner cleaner I had - and it fit "perfectly" over the tuning knob.

At least for me, the tuning knob was a little small - not that big a deal - but I wanted something bigger.

It (the cap mod) looks like it was made with it. I used three of those little square shaped sticky things, they're yellow in color, they were made to stick things to whatever....they're like little squares of chewing gum. The mod has never come off on it's own, maybe a year ago I took it off to see how easy it would pull off and I wanted to clean the mod cap because it's white in color. But it definitely makes it easier to spin the dial. :-)

Bruce, I forgot to ask you. What do you keep your "tone" on? They have the normal/ talk (I think)/ and music. Before I sent mine to RL I had to keep it set on talk. But when they sent it back to me - I couldn't believe the difference in the audio. It was so much better, that I keep my setting on "music" for everything and it sounds great.

Just so you know, RL either includes the mod for the whip or if you asked them to do it they would. I got my 398 basically as soon as they came out. I kind of had mixed feelings on Chris Justice for the drama between him and Grove (I'm sure you read the story), it was pretty hairy on both sides IMO.

But when I sent mine to Chris he had just broke away from Grove and I think I was one of the first to get mine modded....I'm not saying literally the first but you know what I mean. But I had asked him about the whip and he wasn't quite sure at the time if I remember right but later he sent me an email explaining to me why the whip sucked and that he would take care of it. After he started modding the 398/909's in earnest I noticed that (I think) there was no mention of doing anything to the whip itself on their site....I don't know - I could be wrong. {?}

But when I got mine back there was a HUGE difference just off the whip itself - in a way it pissed me off that the radio wasn't like that from go get. But I've never even used the original external antenna jack or the add on antenna socket on the back of the case he added. I've always just used a little length of 12 gauge and rolled it up real tight and placed it over the whip itself with a quarter inch of wire showing and clipped onto that. Have you used the add on antenna socket he put on the back of your radio? Do you like it - good results?

On 6020 at 0900 UCT in Pidgin. That database is so freeking cool, now I know exactly what Pidgin sounds like. It's really not that hard to understand either. Pretty wild music, wouldn't want to wake up to it.

Thanks Steve. How do you know that? I'll definitely be able to catch back up my shortwave, my old Passport just wasn't cutting it, things change too much. That database will really help me out.

Do you use that same one or a combination of three? I also like the map with the greyline.

Products like these radios are manufactured to a price point. To keep a profit in the line, every shortcut that can be taken, must be. The end product is usually a shade of its potential self.

Peter G, here, has often recommended some staightforward upgrades to receivers that include swapping diodes, and making mods to circuitry that cost the end user little, and could well have been done at the beginning, during manufacture. But we don't know what decisions are made by the manufacturer to keep the product at its price point. Or, if compromises are not made, what the actual cost differential may be.

Parts sources dry up, some parts are discontinued, and replacements must be found. In a lot of cases, manufacturers take a shortcut such as found in your 398/909, and the dreadful DX394, and avoid more advanced designs or using some types of part in the first place, both to facilitate a long production cycle, and to retain the price point.

There was a discussion in this newsgroup about 15 years, ago about a function that was missing from a radio, I don't recall which, but the solution was the addition of a single switch. Which many users had done. After much talk, and many complaints, someone from the manufacturer jumped in and said that they were aware that the solution was simple, but that adding the switch at the manufacturing stage would add another $100 to the price of the radio. And then explained why. So the decision had been made to retain the current product design, and let users make the mod themselves.

The hard reality is that if all desigin compromises were eliminated at the manufacturers' end, that 909 would cost about the same as an RX 350. As it is, you can do the mods yourself and save about $900.

Thanks for the response Peter. You would think though (at least I do) that they're having these radio done overseas where the pay is miniscule in comparison to the US to begin. I mean, how much money per radio do these guys have to make for it to be feasible to put out on the market? You know what I'm saying? I guess if the 909/398 was all done over here by US workers the price would have been close to a thousand dollars or a little more, no wonder this country has dipped like it has. FWIW the dreadful 394 with the mods out performs the modded 909/398, at least it did at my QTH using the same antenna. That was just a two to three hour test - might be different on a different day who knows - but the modified 394 really does perform well or it'd be in my closet.

Yeah, I do. But consider that though labor for manufacture may be lower, the practical issues of manufacturing don't change. Parts must still be sourced. Designs have to be made manufacture-compatible. The way things move down the assembly line do have an impact on how things can be practically built. In the end, the price of labor can be a smaller issue compared to the cost of a more advanced design on the assembly line. Using foreign labor may make a $200 difference in price of a radio. A more advanced design may make a much greater difference. So, regardless of labor costs, compromises are made.

During a CES, in the early 90's, I got to meet David Belles, an audio designer of some repute. He had built an amp that was to be manufactured by and sold through Magnum Dynalab. He was an interesting guy, and his amplifier was simply magnificent.

It never made it to production. Why? Because, as designed, it simply could not be practically manufactured. Even at the price point, which was quite steep already. So, the engineers at Magnum Dynalab, no slouches in their own right, looked at the Belles design and proposed modifications that would be more manufacture-friendly. Belles insisted that subtleties of performance would be compromised, and resisted. The project was dropped.

Many things beyond just labor may affect how a product comes to the assembly line.

Screw Duke. Usenet is alive and well, as anyone reading this thread will attest. There are many and varied nntp servers out there more than willing to take your money for access, most so cheap they border on free-of-charge. There's several of those, too. Also, screw the RIAA and the MPAA, a buncha self-serving lying dirtbags who'd screw their own children for a nickel.

Well, we use ours mostly for FM music, so that's what I keep it on usually - but when it goes to SW, I put nit on talk.

I have used the new antenna socket on the back with RCA plug hooked up to my PL-259 from the antenna phaser. Works great, as does the standard side plug. For the whip, I would not make a direct metal-metal connection to a wire; just coil up the incoming wire insulated and place it over the whip. Induction does the rest for you, minimizes images and the potential for static damage.

Today, May 20th 2010, marks a sad day for all of us who remember ï¿½ and grew up with ï¿½ Usenet. Duke University will be forever pulling the plug on the once-popular means of communication, laying it to rest at long last. More than thirty years ago, Usenet was started by two then-students as a means to communicate between computer modems. Many say that it was the beginning of the Internet as we know it today.

Once it began, Usenet quickly grew to become an international electronic discussion forum consisting of more than 120,000 newsgroups. However, not everyone could just jump ï¿½onlineï¿½ using the service because connections were expensive and required a research contract with the federal Advanced Research Projects Agency (ARPA). Dietolf Ramm, professor emeritus of computer science at Duke, said that ï¿½Usenet was a pioneering effort because it allowed anybody to connect and participate communications.ï¿½

While the RIAA and MPAA may be celebrating this news due to the large amount of piracy going around Usenet, this is a sad day for the rest of us. Duke has decided to shut the service down due to rising costs of maintenance and lower volumes of people using the service. I well remember my days back on the computer before the Internet as you know it was born. I was so excited back then when I sent my first message from my computer to another. Itï¿½s a day that changed my life.

...and I'm gonna use existing trees to put it up about 30 feet above ground, 15 feet above my rooftop on a 5x100 foot suburban lot. Power lines both in front and back of my house, the ones behind are much higher voltage, but not real high-tension wires.

All other things being equal, am I better off:

1 - Putting this thing up parallel to, or more perpendicular to, the powerlines?

2 - Having the coax meet the wire at the base of the tree and grounding it there, or running the coax up the tree and then depending on the outer braid on the coax for ground purposes? The coax is grounded at the first termination point at my MFJ antenna phasing unit using a short, heavy copper wire to a ground rod.

That's going to depend on what's on them. As a rule, minimum coupling would occur with a perpendicular arrangement in the same plane.

That said, the lines out of Bagnell Dam picked up and carried WLS and KMOX deep into the Ozarks with a city grade signal. To recover those, I oriented my antenna parallel to the power lines.

You may have to experiment.

Run the wire where you want it to be, terminate the end with a 9:1, ground the wire side there. Run the coax to the secondary of the 9:1 and ground the coax at each end with an earth ground.

I proposed no laws restricting anyone's ability to amass a fortune.

A purely horizontal antenna will usually pick up less local noise. But on the lower bands (say, 6 MHz and below), a low horizontal antenna will also tend to disfavor stations over 1,000 miles distant and favor closer (higher-angle) ones.

Generally, perpendicular to the noise source is better. Visualize it this way: Imagine you are standing with your eyes precisely at the noise source location. Look at your antenna. If your antenna looks like a single point (as it would if you were looking directly at the end of it), there will be relatively little energy induced in the wire. With a diffuse noise source like a power line, of course, it's not quite so simple. But even the most diffuse noise source has a virtual source at each particular frequency, and the concept is still helpful. Desired signals off the ends are also attenuated.

An end-fed, coax-fed single wire with its feedpoint in the air will definitely pick up signals on the outside of the coax and act more like an inverted L, though, and just choking off the currents with a balun won't help much. For true horizontal polarization, you'd be better off with a center-fed dipole arrangement, with a balun at the center not necessary but helpful in minimizing feedline antenna effects. See

http://www.ehow.com/how_6002278_build-dipole-antenna-hf.html

An inverted L fed against ground (which is what you're describing as your second option) is an excellent antenna in my experience, though it may, like a vertical, pick up more local noise than a properly balanced horizontal.

An inverted L is virtually omnidirectional over the lower half of its range, partly due to the fact that it has a combination of vertical and horizontal polarization. Feeding it with coax at the base, with a radial or a few radials laying on the earth for a ground system (the grass roots will ensnare and cover them in a month or two), it will receive very well on any frequency from half up to ten times its quarter wave resonance (quarter wave resonance in MHz is 234 divided by total wire length in feet).

Any antenna that must operate over a wide range of frequencies will necessarily be mismatched to the coaxial cable's input impedance on many of them. A tunable matching network will help signal transfer -- but for lower-band receiving purposes may not really be necessary because atmospheric noise level is usually the limiting factor.

(Antennas used over a wide frequency range also tend to have complex patterns, with many nulls in them, once you get into the higher frequency ranges -- say, more than twice the resonant frequency.)

http://www.ly4a.com/hamradio-news/2008/09/30/inverted-l-antenna-for-160m/

Because of potential static buildup from wind and weather, it's good to make sure that there's a DC path to ground from the antenna -- your receiver may already provide such a path or it can be provided by an input transformer or a high-value resistor.

Here's another simple inverted L reference:

http://www.bloomington.in.us/~wh2t/invertedl.html

When I put up my first inverted-L antenna (60 feet in the vertical section and 90 feet in the horizontal section) I was astounded at how well it worked, both on HF and on the AM broadcast band. From Hillsboro, West Virginia I was able to receive WLS, Chicago (some 500 miles away) and similarly distant stations via daytime ground wave with perfect clarity. On 75 meters, European stations could usually hear me well and I didn't sacrifice short-distance coverage of the U.S. east coast.

Antennas are a heady combination of craftsmanship, instinct, intuition, and science. I recommend the _ARRL Antenna Book_ as a good starting point if you want to learn more.

With all good wishes,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

As far as values are concerned: A sense of peoplehood is essential -- and a sense of peoplehood necessitates race consciousness, since nations are biological entities, not mental or geographic ones.

With a sense of peoplehood -- of who "we" are -- and the ability to see that the survival and progress of our people should be our highest moral values, trumping all others, we have a _chance_ of survival. Without those values, there is no hope: Healthier peoples will displace us and swamp us -- physically, culturally, and genetically.

As for biological quality:

Life, for all living beings, is a struggle for the right to pass our genes on to future generations.

Some human groups have less frontal lobe capabilities than we do, but are far more fecund and loyal to their kind on average than we are.

Others have slightly higher IQs than us on average, but less tendency to produce creative geniuses.

Only time will tell which is the best strategy. There have always been races and varieties of men (just as there have always been varieties of birds or wheat or squirrels), for as long as there have been men on this planet.

As in the days of _homo neanderthalis_ and his competitors -- and as in the days of the several races of _homo erectus_ -- some of the branches of humanity will succeed and continue to evolve and branch yet further... and others will go extinct.

The best strategy for our people being among the former is, I think, positive eugenics. This does not at all mean a society more coercive than ours is. It just means rewarding people with high character and intelligence and creativity for having children -- and rewarding those with a lack of those characteristics for not having children.
(This could ultimately lead to a dramatic reduction in societal coercion, since people of high intelligence and character and responsibility don't need many laws or policemen or prisons, nor do they generally want them.)

I believe that the nation that adopts positive eugenics on a large enough scale will advance and prosper at a rapid and compounding rate. It could possibly leave the rest of us behind to the same extent that _erectus_ was left behind once true humans emerged -- and refused to mate with the lower types.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

That's honest?

Liberty Net for Week of May 15-22

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

GOOD propagation helped the conversations on the Liberty Net this week, and the range of information and opinion presented was impressive. One participant ridiculed those who question the authenticity of Obamaï¿½s alleged birth certificate, while others on the Net believe itï¿½s a phony ï¿½ and Kenyan claims that Obama was born there buttress that belief.

The stations that tried to disrupt the Net last week with crude remarks ï¿½ but got no takers ï¿½ resorted to transmitting random sound effects. But the legitimate participants ignored them and they had little effect, except to encourage a brief switch in frequency.

Here are some of this weekï¿½s highlights, as recorded on May 15th by N2IRJ:

ï¿½ As the utter bankruptcy of the United States proceeds apace, California is paying all those due money from the state with possibly-worthless IOUs ï¿½ and Illinois is paying nothing. (56 minutes)

ï¿½ Are the riots of Greeks who oppose globalization (and who oppose the austerity programs that the banks are demanding in order to pay back their questionable ï¿½debtsï¿½) the moral equivalent of the Black riots in the US incited by Martin Luther King? (59 minutes)

ï¿½ Have the gold bars used in international trade been counterfeited on a massive scale using tungsten, which has the same density as gold? (1 hour 21 minutes)

ï¿½ Could the BP gulf oil disaster be the work of Korean or Mossad terrorists? (1 hour 24 minutes)

ï¿½ As New Jersey careens toward bankruptcy, literally thousands of teachers have been indefinitely furloughed without pay. (1 hour 51 minutes)

ï¿½ Public auctions of US government bonds have been failing, and massive purchases by the Fed (and by bailed-out banks who have an under-the-table ï¿½understandingï¿½ of what they must do with their interest-free federal money) are a temporary cover for that failure. (2 hours 27 minutes)

ï¿½ Why does Barack Hussein Obamaï¿½s Social Security number indicate it was issued in Connecticut (where Obama has never claimed to reside) and that its holder is 119 years old? Has this individualï¿½s paperwork been so obviously faked in order to render him blackmailable? (3 hours 23 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to the Liberty Net right now on your computer ï¿½ or download the file and listen on your portable mp3 player -- by going to http://3950.net/

And N2SAG operates a live feed and chat during Net times that lets you make an end run around jammers and a fickle ionosphere. Our thanks go to W1WCR for his hard work and courage in keeping an important part of the amateur radio service alive since 1974!

Inherited wealth is the worst kind. Restore the inheritance tax back to Ronald Reagan era levels.

I won;r argue the basic point, although I have my reservations...but assuming this is correct...

With one cautionary note -

When people are land-rich and money-poor (forest owners, ranchers, farmers, wetland owners, other fundamentally responsible stewards), a large inheritance tax frequently forces the inheritor (who legally has no choice) to rapidly liquidate the good land to pay the tax bill - sometimes farmland, sometimes natural habitat or even de facto wilderness, and this turns it into subdivisons or other nonproductive, non-habitat land. This unintended consequence has been repeated countless times, and some provision should be made to forestall this problem.

I reckon the Salvation Army thrift store wayyyyyyyyyyy up North on Beasley Road in Jackson is getting ''enough money''.I just now saw Cindy Cheeks (store manager, or whatever) on 5:00 PM WLBT tv news saying the store is fixing to get a makeover.The walls will be painted and the ceiling will be lowered and new ceiling lights and the merchandise will be diplayed more professionaly.

That store used to be a lumber/building supply store years and years ago.
Heh, Cindy Cheeks is real pretty.

I am not familiar with the "family farm" story, whatever that may be.

Not at my fingertips, and assembling it from scratch, with all the variations and permutations, would be a daunting task - although I am pretty sure it has happened to some of our ranching families here in Alameda County; and I have seen claims from smaller mainstream environmental groups in years past that were it not for this law, small timber owners who had previously practiced sustainable forestry would not have been forced to sell still-decent habitat to operations that practiced clearcut logging. Imagine - an environmental group campaigning for the wealthy?

This is not a hard scenario to imagine. I can imagine myself being in that position.

It would be fairly easy to craft a law that applied specifically to these situations without allowing tremendous abuses. I am not going to make a big deal of this; suffice it to say that I think preservation of the last remaining open space lands we have is more important than whether somebody who is wealthy gets a tax break when their parents die. YMMV.

Here is at least one website that mentions this effect. If I can, I will look for others with more substantial details. It is not hard to imagine this happening; as I mentioned family ranches here in Alameda County and some sustainable timber lands have been lost to inheritance tax.

From http://www.saveland.org ~

"Donating conservation land to a land trust is a wonderful way to share its beauty with future generations. The donation can even be set up in a way that allows you to continue to live on the land or to receive a life income.

Doing nothing to protect it may doom your land to development. Why? Estate taxes are one reason. Federal taxes can be as high as 55% of a property's fair market value, virtually forcing heirs to sell it. And, of course, future owners may be compelled by ever-increasing property values—or simply by a lack of appreciation for the land—to sell it for development."

Imagination is wonderful.

How about some facts, statistics about the "family farms". etc that were lost to the inheritance tax?

There were huge exemptions.

Republicans took care of the wealthy...as usual and conned the ordinary schnook who thought he might have a taxable inheritance.

Best con job in recent history!

So far you've provided no statistics.

"...Neil Harl, an Iowa State University economist whose tax advice has made him a household name among Midwest farmers, said he had searched far and wide but had never found a farm lost because of estate taxes. "It's a myth," he said.

Even one of the leading advocates for repeal of estate taxes, the American Farm Bureau Federation, said it could not cite a single example of a farm lost because of estate taxes...."

Maybe - so what is wrong with preventing it from happening? That's my whole point.

Look, I told you I am not going to make a big deal of this. You may be right or wrong, but to me point this is irrelevant. I do not have time to scour the internet and every other resource finding you examples. All I want is a law protecting the land from ever falling victim to this problem. If it never happens, it never happens, but at least the law is there in case it does. End of story.

The last thing I will post - from http://www.Americanforests.org - probably not the kind of stats you are looking for (it sounds like you have already convinced yourself that this scenario never happens, so maybe no stats would be of value), but it shows that the effect has not gone unnoticed by people who pay greater attention than either of us...

"Family forest owners have generally been bystanders to the dramatic transformations in industrial timberland ownership, but they are inevitably being drawn into the vortex. They own 59 percent of the nation's forests in holdings that range from less than 10 acres to more than a thousand. They have traditionally depended on local mills to market their products, generally small-volume sawlogs and low-value material sold to pulp and paper mills.

As industrial owners close their domestic mills and move their operations offshore, where labor costs a tenth of the U.S. rates, small landowners are left without a market for their forest products. That cuts their incentive to manage their holdings as timberlands and increases the temptation to sell to developers.

America's mom and pop forest owners are also aging. Half are at least 55 years old, according to a study by the National Commission on Science for Sustainable Forestry. When their land changes hands, through inheritance or sales, it follows a trend that mirrors the timber industry and goes into the hands of multiple owners. By 2020, the study predicts, the number of private timberland owners will expand from today's 9.9 million to 12 million.

Each additional owner increases the potential for forest fragmentation. And each fragment will be more difficult to manage as timberland. Within the next decade, the science commission projects that America will lose 10 million acres of private forestlands, an area larger than New Hampshire and Connecticut combined. By 2050 an additional 13 million acres will be lost, according to Forests on the Edge.

"The trends are not good," says the American Forest Foundation's Simpson. He calls this drift toward development America's invisible forest crisis."

Taxing the crap out of landholdings when an owner dies is not going to help this situation.

I did not have to look very hard for this information. Ranching, farmland, mineral resource lands, fillable wetlands, desert lands and many others may experience similar situations. You may have your noble cause to attend to, but let's not make believe that even the best of intentions will not have unintended consequences. I want the land preserved in its most natural state, and that will not happen anytime it is sold to the highest bidder by force of economics.

Last word is yours.

It proves the "inheritance tax" which Republican characterized as the "death tax" treated taxpayers in fair manner by providing large exemptions..

The heirs could just as well deed the land to the government for such purposes as you suggest. But, that never happened or happened only rarely.

This tax goes back almost to the founding of our country.....until recently when it was repealed by very clever Republicans protecting wealthy estates...nest con job in recent history!

The "forced sale" is a myth.

That was the propaganda used by Republicans to gain support for the repeal.

My guess is that NOT ONE ACRE of land was preserved by this repeal.

All it did was raise the deficit and the national debt.

I agree.

Noble, but not workable. So, the smart people who can follow your reason do not breed, while the gullible stupid listening to religious fanatics do, and their numbers are increasing at the polls.

What's needed is more fertilized eggs of the case manager class who will grow up to deal with the problems and have fewer clients in the case loads.

I know a MSW who bore four daughters, who all grew up to be nurses and/or social workers. But the four have had no daughters at all, and grandma is still working at 71 cause they cant find anyone competent enuf to replace her.

The social safety nets need far more competent people holding it all together, and far fewer sitting in it.

"Equal opportunity" has not, in fact, increased the numbers supporting social services cause you cannot develop talent that is not innately there to start with. And, those few which are found to be gifted tend far more often to be hired by the corporate culture which pays better.

The effective caseworker/healthcare provider relies on an innate talent to read body language apart from the "IQ" or other such talents academics and business wants and measures. You havta be born with it.

Granted that lotsa poor women have it, and have perfectly adequate maternal instincts as well, but lack the other aspects of intelligence to keep up with the science, drugs, nutrition, educational policy, and so on an effective case worker needs.

One solution is to provide poor women with in vitro fertilized eggs from women who have been remarkably effective in healthcare and case management. Having more girls like this in class will result in far lower rates of violence in the schools because already they pick up on the body language clues to impending problems.

Right, that is what I did. There is no actual wire touching the whip

Aristotle:"Most men are such slaves to passion they'd do better in the hands of a more rational master". Politics claims, but fails, to produce that master.

Reading Cosmopolitan and Glamour to see what young women are being told, I find raps about them giving up on ever meeting "Mr. Wright" and going to fertility clinics. They wont have the perfect marriage, but are very happy with the perfect baby.

Upscale white thirty something career women, no longer sexy hotties are increasingly doing this, and no doubt, raising the first generation of the Uberwench.

But in the name of equal opportunity, we should subsidize fertility clinics for poor women and provide DNA analysis. If need be, provide in vitro so these women, who have repeatedly shown us they can raise kids on little money, would be far more rewarded for their effort later in life as successful children will be better able to look after momma. Even if mom's skin is darker.

There's lotsa stories from the Robber Baron era of successful men who took very good care of their black nannies later in life. This just moves that process up 9 months. It'd reduce the cost of premature infants so much that alone would be justify fertility clinic services.

Make it available to illegal women. the men who think they own these women will ship them back to the old country ASAP rather than using them to produce anchor babies.

I forgot about him, I never really remembered him in RRS till Krypsie came over here, not to say he never frequented here - I just don't remember him. He did have some pretty "uncomfortable" stories to share IMO. ;-)

The one I cracked up on was that Brian fella. I know after being reminded numerous times that he "supposedly" purchased the whatever brand I forget ....but the "Buzz Aldrin Special Edition." LOL

I actually thought he was going to become a regular, seeing how he was soooo emotional about his new piece and was sooooo nice to everyone that spoke to him or fell for him...lol. Oh well, hope he's enjoying his radio, I especially loved the one story (I forget how it started) but something about him finding out his son/daughter was going to have a child? And how everything that day was just perfect - - and then of course ending with the "sex scene" with his "wife" - - - all that was missing was the description of the money shot. What a hoot! :-D

Gentlemen, Peter and Kevin, thank you for the excellent ideas - some I knew, some ARE new - I don't have a lot of room to experiment, but my trees are situated so as to allow a generally perpendicular orientation to the power lines, my main nemesis. Unfortunately, 30 feet is about as high as I can practically put them, but it's higher than what I have now, so anything is an improvement, eh? Again, thanks :-)

OK - I went out there in the freeking dark and measured my "shed."

I was close in what I was thinking , but off pretty much in the height. The "Heavyweight Champ Of Sheds"<heh> comes in peaked at "exactly" eleven and a quarter X eleven and a quarter X nineteen and three quarter. The height of nineteen and three quarter though.... that is at the tallest part, the rooftop is like a house, follow me?
That is where I measured, but the slant coming down isn't dramatic - it's pretty gradual. I'm 6ft.2" and have no problem at all in there with room or fear of bumping into anything and once I put four more shelves in there with the two already there - - I can move some more fun stuff in there. If only I had electricity in there, I could put in a window (it's windowless) and a little AC unit and a little heater for the winter. It wouldn't take much IMO to cool or heat a little area like that.

But I have a spot where I can put things above me, but once I do, I can't see them which kind of sucks, but I just use my little wooden six step ladder to take a peak up there. The walls were made (I'm not too technical here so I don't know how to phrase it in building lingo) with the outside wall and then the spray foam insulation and then another wall to cover it up, still with me? The floor is just your typical floor, it creaks in a couple spots, I would say the floor is the worst in terms of stability but in my "not really knowing how to build a shed mind" .....it would be the easiest to replace - I hope.

But after I measured it I had to walk into the hallowed area...lol...pretty cool to see that wire clipped to the AD dissapear into the shed and there she stood when I opened that heavy ass door <start the baptist church choir music> my lazy susan with the Vaunted GE P-780 sitting proudly on top of her. Pathetically I felt somewhat aroused <snicker> so I HAD TO sit in my very comfy rocking chair where I then turned on the GE.

I have to say.....HUGE difference with the wire to the AD. Every little turn of the dial produced something I could work with in turning the table to bring in the signal or peaking or nulling with the loop. So I'm very pleased, it's one of those things I always wanted to do but just never got around to doing it. So I have to get another set of fresh D cells for my other 780 because I don't want to miss having one in the house. Now knowing the dimensions and how it was built, does it sound safe enough to keep it out there all the time? Drifter, if you're reading this - let me know your opinion.

Yeah, I can picture that, it sounds great on FM and the RDS is pretty cool.

I forget, can those external antennas - especially the RCA plug - you could hook up an external FM antenna just for music, right? DX the FM band.

This one Bruce. Bob threw it my way. http://www.short-wave.info/index.php

It's exactly like the one you said you had seen before, plug in the freq. and it tells you everything. I can't picture another one being any better or easier to use than that one, check it out - can't beat it IMO -very informative.

Even shows the greyline map with the UCT of your timezone.

Thanks again goes to Bob.

Hearing a touch of "The Voice of The People" from Korea - don't know if it's N or S from Kyonggi. Not clear, but every minute to two the smattering of crashes clears up and you can hear talking.

Voice of Korea is Pyeongyang.

Not sure what the ROK station is, can't hear it here (too far for ground wave, too close for skip). I hear VOK fairly often, even sometimes in English. DPRK broadcast radio is interesting to listen to on occasion. It's a little like that Yakov Smirnov joke:

Channel 1 has propaganda and martial music and songs and poetry to the Dear Leader.

Channel 2 has secret police telling you to turn back to channel 1.

You're welcome.

Scaling the inverted L I described to half size -- 30 feet vertical and 45 feet horizontal -- will still give excellent performance.

A radio shack? You'll need a fan in the winter to bring the warm air down.

I think so - I'd have to check. What you'd need to do is put up an external FM-designed antenna as high as possible. I have tried my big outdoor wires on FM and VHF and UHF on one of my portables, and the little whip antennas are usually as good or better for most applications, just because the wavelengths are a better match. In this case, height is more important than excess size.

That'll work well, too.

Putting a few radials on the ground (or, even better, elevated a few feet above the ground) connected to the coaxial feedline's shield will help the low angle (most distant) reception.

Recent studies indicate that radials don't need to be a quarter wave long for best results as previously believed, either. About 195 divided by the frequency in MHz (with the answer in feet) is near ideal, but they will still help at any length.

I've used flat rotor cable with the conductors pulled apart, or separated strands of telephone PBX cable, stapled to the grassy yard with staples made from cut up coat hangers bent into a U shape and hammered over the wire every five or ten feet. If it's done carefully, you can mow over them the same day without problems. After a few weeks, the grass buries them and you can hardly tell the wires are there.

If I was going to build a new inverted L today, I'd elevate the feedpoint and radials about seven feet for higher efficiency -- but it would look a bit more obtrusive.

Good luck with the antenna,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

Thanks again - my space for radials is super limited - no more than about 15 feet in any direction, and usually less - but maybe if there are enough of them it would help make up for it.

I have a pretty good ground here - near the edge of SF Bay and only about 10 feet above sea level, our ground water is pretty brackish and seeps upward too. I don't know that this would help with the low-angle reception, though. Maybe a ground rod plus attached radials?

You may well be right about that one. But, with the media controlled by groups with an agenda, it's good to have open discussions and analytically critical minds.

By Jefferson's and Washington's definition, and the definition of practically everyone prior to the last few decades, Obama can't possibly be an American. Especially since Constitutional amendments "passed" under duress during a military dictatorship, with most voters forcibly disenfranchised, cannot be regarded as legal by any reasonable definition of the word. The birth certificate issue would just be "icing on the cake," if true.

But I agree that there are many crazy beliefs out there. Believing that the Washington regime is the legal and legitimate government of the United States -- now _that's_ crazy.

With all good wishes,

That sounds good. The brackish water in the far field will definitely help. The inverted L will work without the radials, just not as well for the more distant stations.

LOL! Certainly the Founding Fathers never intended the government to

The Founding Fathers never intended the government to be run by

WB4AIO offers some excellent information and I would like to add the following:

Generally speaking, (Note I stated GENERALLY SPEAKING here) end fed antennas tend to be most directional in line with their longitudinal axis. In other words, an inverted-L, end fed, would pick up the greatest capture in the direction that it is "pointing."

Center fed antennas GENERALLY tend to be most directional perpendicular to their longitudinal axis.

Again, I stress these are VERY BROAD and GENERAL rules of thumb. Of course there are always exceptions such as the center fed Zepp which tends to be most directive off its ends. As one respondent stated...experiment. There is a reason they call technical suppositions "theories."
It is because they are just that, theories only. Real world performance is whatever you get and can be morphed by ground conductivity, nearby structures, interactions and terrain as well as theories that are conventional but one day will be refuted.

FCC Says It Has 'No Record' of Any Communication to or from its Chairman Mentioning Limbaugh, Hannity, Levin, Beck, Ingraham or Savage
Friday, May 21, 2010
By Fred Lucas, Staff Writer

(CNSNews.com) – The Federal Communications Commission (FCC) says it has “no records” of any communication either “to or from” its chairman that mentions Rush Limbaugh, Sean Hannity, Mark Levin, Glenn Beck, Laura Ingraham or Michael Savage.

The FCC made the declaration in response to a Freedom of Information Act request by CNSNews.com that sought all its records reflecting communications from FCC Chairman Julius Genachowski mentioning the popular radio hosts. "No records of correspondence responsive to your request were located as a result of a search of records of the Chairman's office," said the FCC in a May 6 letter to CNSNews.com.

Despite this assertion, a letter about “hate speech in the media” specifically citing “radio talk show host Rush Limbaugh” was in fact sent to FCC Chairman Julius Genachowski by a coalition of liberal groups last fall.

This letter came in 2009, a year that saw a series of attacks against Limbaugh by the Obama White House. President Barack Obama, for example, reportedly said in January 2009 during a meeting with congressional Republicans, “You can’t just listen to Rush Limbaugh and get things done.”

Not long thereafter, White House officials began referring to Limbaugh as the leader of the Republican Party. For example, White House Chief of Staff Rahm Emanuel, on CBS’s Face the Nation, said that Limbaugh “is the voice and the intellectual force and energy behind the Republican Party.”

White House Press Secretary Robert Gibbs also referred to Limbaugh as “the head of the Republican Party.”
http://www.cbsnews.com/8301-503544_162-4842810-503544.html

Later in 2009, several liberal interest groups lobbied to block Limbaugh from joining with other investors to buy an NFL team. At the time, CNN’s Rick Sanchez ran an item that falsely attributed a inflamatory statement to Limbaugh.

The March 25, 2010 Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) request from CNSNews.com to the FCC specifically asked for “all correspondence, memoranda, documents, reports, records, statements, audits, lists of names, applications, diskettes, letters, calendar or diary logs, facsimile logs, call sheets, tape recordings, video/movie recordings, notes, examinations, opinions, folders, files, books, manuals, pamphlets, forms, drawings, charts, photographs, electronic mail and other documents and communications generated by or for or sent to or from FCC Chairman Julius Genachowski referring to or relating to: 1. Localism, or local ownership rules 2.) Rush Limbaugh 3.) Glenn Beck 4.) Sean Hannity 5.) Mark Levin 6.) Michael Savage 7.) Laura Ingraham.” In order to expedite a response from the FCC, CNSNews.com subsuquently agreed to narrow the request to all "communications directly to or from the Chairman mentioning or discussing Rush Limbaugh, Sean Hannity, Glenn Beck, Laura Ingraham, Mark Levin, Michael Savage, or 'media ownership.'"

Concerning those hosts, Joel Kaufman, associate general counsel and chief of the administrative law division for the FCC, responded to CNSNews.com in a May 6 letter. http://www.mrc.org/splash/FCC-Foia.pdf In addition to stating that the FCC found "no records" of any communications to or from FCC Chairman Genachowski mentioning or discussing the radio hosts, Kaufman said the FCC "did locate briefing materials for the Chairman concerning 'media ownership' that we are withholding in their entirety pursuant to FOIA Exemption 5,5 U.S.C 552(b)(5)." He said this exemption to the FOIA law "permits the withholding of materials in order to encourage open, frank disucssions on matters of policy between subordinates and superiors."

The FCC's statement that it has no records of communications to or from the chairman mentioning the talk radio hosts stands in contrast to an online petition from October 2009 spearheaded by the So We Might See Coalition, a liberal interfaith group opposing what it called hate speech in the media. The petition was set up specifcally to send a letter to Genachowski and Lawrence E. Strickling, the assistant secretary for communication and information at the Department of Commerce.

The interfaith coalition letter http://www.ucc.org/media-justice/mvf2009/take-action.html is headlined “Re: Petition for Inquiry into Hate Speech in the Media and Request to update report on The Role of Telecommunications in Hate Crimes” and mentions “radio talk show host Rush Limbaugh.”

The So We Might See Coalition petition (and letter) was supporting an earlier petition launched in January 2009 by the National Hispanic Media Coalition. So We Might See Coalition spokeswoman Cheryl Leanza told CNSNews.com on May 18 that the letter and petition were sent to the FCC chairman and assistant Commerce secretary last fall. However, she said the FCC had not responded about conducting an inquiry, and she did not know exactly how many people had signed the petition.

Kaufman, the FCC counsel, said on May 18 that a records search would not always produce every document.

“We check with the chairman’s office,” Kaufman told CNSNews.com when asked about the coalition’s petition. “A couple of possibilities: One is, if they filed some petition, did they send it to the chairman’s office or did they send it to the secretary’s office? The other thing is, in any particular case, it is simply documents that the agency currently has.”

“So, depending what they send and when they send it, it may or may not be something,” said Kaufman. “It was not something that was found when they did the search. If at some point in time, a document like that was in the office of the chairman, I have no idea.”

“It might have gone to the chairman’s office but is no longer in the possession of the agency,” Kaufman continued. “There is always the possibility if something wasn’t put in a subject matter file that it just might not have been found despite doing a reasonable search. I’m not at all suggesting that happened. Those are things that could have happened.”

CNSNews.com asked Kaufman if it is possible other documents mentioning the radio hosts were also not found.

“It’s always possible,” said Kaufman. “I mean, the thing is, an agency, when it’s doing FOIA, is bound to do a reasonable search and that was done. But in some cases things depend on how they were filed, whether they can be found. I can never say it’s impossible.”

Kaufman also said that the FCC keeps some records for only three to six months.

“It really depends on the type of the document,” he said. “Some things we only keep as long as they are useful to the ongoing work of the agency. If it’s a consumer letter, it might be sent to the consumer bureau to respond. I don’t know off the top of my head what the different record retention schedules are. Certainly some of them are quite short. Some of them are only in the three-to-six months range. Some are pretty brief.”

It is possible public officials may have sought to avoid a document trail, said Hans von Spakovsky, a former Justice Department attorney and former commissioner of the Federal Election Commission, told CNSNews.com.

“It is possible there was never a mention of those names,” he said. “Anybody in government these days when discussing controversial issues often use the phone or have face-to-face meetings--not e-mails or memos because they are afraid that will come up in Congress or through a FOIA request.”

There are gray areas in determining what the agency is responsible for providing or what the agency has available, former FCC attorney Lawrence Spiwak told CNSNews.com.

“If the actual petition was filed pursuant to the rules of the commission, the commission has to answer them,” said Spiwak, president of the Phoenix Center for Advanced Legal & Economic Public Policy Studies. “They may have to keep the records in that particular case. But it could be a gray area.”

The FCC often avoids getting into content regulation, so it is possible the agency had very limited correspondence to and from the chairman’s office on the popular radio hosts, said Michael Harrison, editor of the industry journal Talkers Magazine.

“Quite often someone will say so-and-so is a hatemonger or such-and-such is not fair and balanced,” Harrison told CNSNews.com. “But that is a lot of stuff that the FCC does not want to deal with. It is a violation of the First Amendment for bureaucrats to regulate political opinion.”

It is dangerous to allege certain talk show hosts are guilty of hate speech, Harrison added.

He continued, “It is a slippery slope to blame commentators legitimately expressing their views on current events and politics and draw connections with random acts of violence. That’s very dangerous to the First Amendment and is without academic credibility or scientific research. Even if it was supported by academic research of a connection between free speech and violence, would we shut down art, shut down boxing and wrestling, shut down the First Amendment?”

FCC Considering new ownership rules

The FCC's refusal to release communications to and from the chairman on the FCC's internal deliberations on "media ownership" rules could help the agency avert sparking renewed conflict with Republicans in Congress, who are concerned about potential new diversity and local ownership rules that could take broadcast licenses away from stations that broadcast conservative hosts and give them to new owners who would feature programming more amenable to liberals.

“Looking at ownership rules is one way to try to get the Fairness Doctrine they want but do it differently, in a way they might feel is a more legitimate way that they can easily defend,” von Spakovsky said.

Some Republicans have charged that new ownership rules could be used as a back door means to reinstate the Fairness Doctrine, a rule that required radio stations to broadcast both sides of controversial issues but had the effect of discouraging station owners from airing public affairs programming.

The Center for American Progress (CAP)
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6709

a liberal group, published a report in 2007, “The Structural Imbalance of Political Talk Radio,” http://www.americanprogress.org/issues/2007/06/talk_radio.html

argued that licensees who owned multiple radio stations were more likely to feature conservative programming, and that conservative programming could be reduced if the number of stations these owners held were reduced. The CAP report was co-authored by Mark Lloyd, who is now the chief diversity officer of the FCC.

In addition to saying there was a structural imbalance in talk radio in the CAP report, Lloyd wrote a 2006 book “Prologue to a Farce: Communications and Democracy in America” that called for making private broadcasting companies pay licensing fees equal to their total operating costs to allow public broadcasting outlets to spend the same on their operations as the private companies.

http://www.cnsnews.com/news/article/52435

The FCC’s Genachowski told Sen. Charles Grassley (R-Iowa) that the FCC has no plans to reinstate the Fairness Doctrine in a letter from August 2009, obtained by CNSNews.com in an earlier FOIA request.

“I do not support the Fairness Doctrine’s reinstatement and oppose any effort to censor or impose speech on the basis of political views or opinions,” said Genachowski. “Further, I do not support policies intended to reinstate the Fairness Doctrine through the backdoor or otherwise.”

Bringing a stealth Fairness Doctrine might not be the goal of advocates of community boards, but it could be the result, said Penny Nance, a former special advisor to the FCC.

“Community boards where all people are represented on the public airwaves may sound good, but what if a Christian radio station with a broadcast license has to have a Muslim representative on the board,” said Nance, now the chief executive officer of Concerned Women for America. “There could be unintended consequences for Christian radio and talk radio. Community boards could run counter to free speech.”

Thanks, Clive - my room to experiment is extremely limited, but I will do what I can.

Voice of Mongolia used to be my beacon station for propagation. If it was coming in good, it was a good day for dxing. During solar cycle 22
I used to have a small inverted vee on the side of a building at work.
I used to pick up the morning transmission on 12015 with my Sony SW-1.

Hundreds of thousands of people cross the border illegally every year.
Besides Mexican crossers, there are what the Border Patrol calls “OTMs” (Other Than Mexicans). There’s even a route north of Douglas, Arizona, known as the “Arab Road”.

Where (what city) was your job? I've never heard VoM except in the wee hours...

The lower bands were just so-so last night, but propagation on 25 meters and up was certainly good - the band was hopping! Asia and Pacific Rim were numerous, V. Islam from Malaysia on 19 meters was better than I can remember.

I stuck with VoM until 0940 or so, after it had switched over to Mongolian. I had never really heard it as good as this. I wish I could have stayed up longer, but my eyelids said "nope!"

I have a wood fence around my back yard. Across the back stretch is 79 feet. The fence extends 76 feet from there along each side of my house which is 50 feet wide, leaving around 14 feet on each side of the house. The back of the house to the fence is 37 feet . The eve of my two story house is, if I remember right, about 23 feet above the ground. I want to erect a random wire antenna of insulated 12 gauge wire from one corner of the fence in the back, lead it up to the middle of the house to an insulator, then back down to the other corner of the fence, where the feedpoint will connect at the end. The back of my house faces due North. The antenna will be held about 8' feet off the ground at the fence corners by schedule 40 PVC pipe. I want to juse the feeline system as described by John Doty in this article:
http://www.hard-core-dx.com/nordicdx/antenna/feed/feed1.html
I have a Radio Shack DX-398 equivalent of the Sangean ATS-909. I was thinking the two ground rods will be set in a hole 1 foot in diameter filled with a Bentonite slurry. I was wondering if the random wire folded into such an inverted V facing due North will have good reception qualities. The previous residence I erected an inverted L random wire antenna and received excellent results, but seemed very directional. I am hoping the inverted V shape will help diversify the direction of reception somewhat at this house. What do you all think?

If thousands of White people were crossing into the USA illegally, the

The Founding Fathers had no clue of what the nation and the world would be facing centuries down the road. I suspect that they would be no less confused by the world today than any other politician. How they would handle it, with 18th century common sense, is anyone's

It was in a northern suburb of Detroit. Remember this was the mid 1980's. VoM used to come in around 1200UT-1300UT (around sunrise local). I started early and maintained equipment in the building which is why I was able to put up antennas there.

Thank you for the links Mike. I won't be transmitting from the antenna, just receiving for SWL. I am trying to get something that works wideband and maybe the multiband dipole is the way to go. I will have to look at the spreadsheet I have for the bands the DX-398 recieves on and see if I can design one of those. I don't think the wife will say anything beyond an intial question of "What the heck is that?" Hi all

I don't usually post here but I recently featured a tour of my Shortwave QSL colection in the latest episode of Amateurlogic, an Amateur Radio & technology vidcast I help make.

The episode to look for is episode 28. You can watch it at Youtube (search on Amateurlogic) or download it from here.

http://www.amateurlogic.tv

The collection features mainly QSLs from 25-30 years ago including a 3d Radio Tampa QSL, Radio Berlin International amongst others

Its worth a view.

And interesting experiment, to be sure. But WAAAAAAYYYYY too much antenna for your receivers. You may have to pad it considerably to prevent overload on these radios.

That said, it wouldn't be the first time a hobbyist built an antenna and had to find a receiver to fit it.

By all means, give it a shot. And if you're overloading, which is likely, either pad, reduce coupling, or start looking for a receiver that can handle such an antenna.

It will be like stepping out of a modified 57 BelAir with a Corvette drive train into a Vector W8.

I've noticed the 'biological entity' business earlier. Corporations, Large organizations and Political parties exhibit the same characteristic. As in a living body, there is a need for nourishment and growth. The antibodies are always at work.

Maintaining Income/Money flow replaces food/water. Growth is mandatory. New cells may be added through procreation or recruitment. Public relations become the camouflage device of choice and as always, the inner, not-so-wholesome workings aren't visible to the world at large. Much like the intestines of a Supermodel.

Survival is at the top of the list. These 'biological' entities will defend individual 'cells' or 'units' or 'employees' up to a degree. If the Brain unit realizes that maintaining this defense will cost too dearly, the member is chewed off and left. A Politician/TV Evangelist with his leg in a corruption/morality trap is a fine example.

First, the cellular denial stage: "I have done nothing wrong.". Then the Body attempts defense: "We have to wait for all the facts to be in before we pass judgment.". Things then rot further and the disreputable cell is surgically removed and all visible ties severed.

The act of complete remorse, feigned or genuine, may sometimes act as a healing agent. Exhibiting free flowing tears helps the process.

Reasonable, and worth thinking about.

But consider the growing power of women. The brave heart, strong right arm, sword in hand... no longer cuts it. These power structures you refer to were all established by alpha males. But the threats and violence they employed to get power dont work so well anymore. They cant even protect themselves from modern weapons like nukes and WMD, much less the rest of us.

Their protection services were why we put up with their BS in the first place. And in contrast to the Semitic claim that they are all the "Sons of Abraham", now we see upscale thirty something white career women going to fertility clinics to select from among the most promising Y chromosomes... to get the perfect baby, and blowing off the idea of ever having the perfect marriage.

And as the network of fertility clinics expands, the price will fall down to the point where non-white poor women will take advantage of the same services. And we all know what Y chromosome lines they will pick.

The whole notion of "race" will become obsolete in a few generations.

One more time for John Smith,

So your 'portable' AM/FM Shortwave Radio Needs an External Antenna for Better Reception . . .
http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/8ca610e444b71ebd

-then- Consider the Portable Wire Antenna (PWA)

"Portable Wire Antenna" (PWA) that was created and written about by Tom Sevart [N2UHC]

- 1 - Putting this thing up parallel to,

Most of the time perpendicular.
Also keep both ends of the Antenna wire
as far away from the Power Lines as possible.

- 2 - Having the coax meet the wire at the base
- of the tree and grounding it there,

IMHO this represents the better 'safety' Ground and the Inverted "L" Antenna is the better Omni-Directional and All-Band SWL Antenna.

Plus running {burying} the Coax Cable under-the-ground
even if it is only 4"~6" is better than on-the-ground {tripping} and up-in-the-air {noise}.

- or running the coax up the tree and then depending
- on the outer braid on the coax for ground purposes?

IF you have to run the Coax Cable from the Roof
to the Tree in-the-air then this works.
* but use a Ground Rod at the base of the Tree and a Heavy Ground Wire up the Tree to the Matching Transformer, Coax Cable and Antenna Wire 'connection'.

- The coax is grounded at the first termination point at
- my MFJ antenna phasing unit using a short, heavy
- copper wire to a ground rod.

Short and Heavy Ground Wires are always preferred.

Arky Bob,

http://www.ee.washington.edu/circuit_archive/circuits/activeant.html

TIP - Mount the Whip {Antenna Element} and Amplifier outside a Window at 45* like a Flag Pole.

Coax Cable to Radio with Speaker Wire for power leads to a Switch & Battery near the SWL Radio.

Better a make your own 2-Transistor Active Antenna
http://www.dxzone.com/cgi-bin/dir/jump2.cgi?ID=22731
http://www.dxzone.com/cgi-bin/dir/jump2.cgi?ID=16539

Fancier "Tuned Active Antenna for 5 to 22 MHz

SWL -Newbies- Beyond the "Tiny-Tenna"
* DIY- Active Antenna Kits and a lot more . . .
http://groups.google.com/group/rec.radio.shortwave/msg/b5d90a539eb30f90

TSE - Instead of a Short (18"~39"} Whip Antenna Use a Mini 12"16" Hula-Hoop as a Frame for a piece of 300 Ohm Twin-Lead [TL] taped all the way around it. On one end {left-side} use one wire of the TL going CW, and on the other end {right-side} use the other wire of the TL going CCW. This gives you two parallel wires that are equal and opposite that act as a circular-dipole. This Mini-Loop-Dipole Antenna Element can then be both 'rotated' and 'positioned' to reduce your local noise pick-up.

hope this helps a 'tiny-tenna' itty-bitty - iane ~ RHF

He is talking about the original V shaped antenna that John described.
He is saying - split it in half and feed it at the top insulator with coax instead of feeding it at the end with a balun.

I've been waiting for years for someone to realize that.
At the present rate of Human overpopulation it might be only ten to twenty years before we have killed off the planet and ourselves.
Some forms of life will still survive but not 9 or 10 billion.
Humans have one fatal flaw called "me, me, me!". Nobody seems to think beyond their own comfort zone until forced to, and that day is getting nearer with every new born human.
Something to ponder.
This was a drive by posting since shortwave is not in this post, and it is OT and cross posted.

Yep... that be the problem, alright.. and to top it off, the relative few

10-4 on that one. I've gotten into it with a lot of people on the them to have 10 or more children. At this point my daughter is even Sorry again. That was not a long wave beacon or anything.

The frequency was 14.264 MHz. Was rushing to get the info out.

Ignore the Roy Fisk noise. The original poster says he has a V shaped antenna that he was thinking about end feeding, thus making it more of an L. I suggest breaking it in the middle.

If your blood line doesn't live through the coming Hell on Earth, then your blood line won't live at all.

After the debacle caused by greed, irrationality, dysgenics, and a deeply flawed economic system, there will still be a need for human types with high intelligence and the ability to create high culture and science, so that evolution can continue once again in an upward direction.

Within each race and civilization, one can roughly divide the population into _problem-makers_ and _problem-solvers_.

The overpopulation problem is primarily caused by the vast oversupply and terrifying fecundity of problem-makers.

But there is a real _shortage_ of problem-solvers.

Problem-solvers tend to be intelligent and responsible.
Unfortunately, problem-solvers often carry the "responsibility" part too far -- to the point where it becomes self-defeating.

They see overpopulation. They see a clouded future. They see what tremendous time and resources it takes to give a child the best possible life.

So they limit their numbers. While the problem-makers continue to increase through profligate reproduction.

With each generation, human numbers get larger -- but, far more importantly, the percentage of problem-solvers gets smaller and smaller.

Upon this elite group all human progress -- and probably even human survival -- depends. And they are committing suicide.

We may be heading for a near-extinction event, such as the event(s) that brought the European and Asian races into being. (We know that such an event or events took place, since genetic variation among races which left Africa in prehistoric times is _far less_ than among those who stayed -- therefore extreme circumstances made for a dramatic culling of the population, resulting in relatively rapid evolution and the formation of new races.)

If drastic steps are taken now to increase the problem-solver percentage of our population, it's possible that a cataclysmic collapse and near-extinction-type culling can be avoided.

If we don't do that, America will continue to go down the path of Third Worldization -- and become little more than a gigantic nuclear-armed Zimbabwe, and a powerful catalyst for destruction.

Either way, the problem-maker contribution to the gene pool will, ultimately, be drastically reduced. Nature cannot be fooled.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

I see - and the advantage is less directionality, like a dipole.

But if that is what you seek, then why not just end-feed the PAR and set it up as a sloper with the fed end near the gournd and the far end up high? That's what Dale recommends, and you still get more omni out of it plys good noise isolation. No surgery required.

Either that or take some plain wire and do the split version. If I got the PAR, I'd be hesitant to take a nice, slighlty pricey antenna and chop-shop it.

I have a 65' random wire located about 225 feet from my house with a 9:1
matching transformer at the antenna end, and roughly 300 feet of coax running underground (in plastic conduit) between the antenna and the house and then up and over across my attic before coming down the wall where my radio is. There's a ground at the matching transformer, and one at the house. I've got ferrites at each end too.

It's a wonderful antenna. My noise floor is incredibly low.

A concern I have with the antenna you're proposing is you're bringing the antenna back to the house - where all the electrical noise you're looking to avoid is located.

Your radio really doesn't need a big antenna. Design yours so you keep the antenna as far from your house (and your neighbors homes) as possible. 15-20 feet is probably plenty for that radio.

RFI strength goes down by a square of the distance. Put your antenna twice as far away and you get 1/4 of the noise signal. Three times as far away and you get 1/9 of the noise signal.

Something to consider is if you're even thinking about getting your ham ticket some day, it's worth spending the money up front to use low loss coax or heliax. My antenna is useless for tx, and digging up all that pipe to replace my coax just isn't an attractive option.

Dang! I'd give my right arm for that much space to erect an antenna.

It doesn't suck.

Before I had this one, my signal to noise level was a problem, even when I did the horizontal loop.

But I really wish I'd used heliax.

I read a "Book of Knowledge" published in the 1930's and it said that all the people on earth could fit into a one mile square cube. These days it would probably take a 2 mile square, shoulder to shoulder.

Too correct. Thank you welfare and illegals. They breed like crazy and

The highest IQ group seem to be too busy making new discoveries and not making any superior babies. Many professionals I have known do not have kids at all, married or not. Then they complain about traffic jams and the results of the mice breeding. <sigh>.

I think it will be a total extinction event(s), brought on by greed, ignoring the problem until it is too late. We humans are driving many species into extinction ever day. Japan and a few other countries are still whaling, even though the whale population is dropping to near extinction. The mountain gorillas are all but gone, thanks to Japan paying good money for gorilla hand ash trays. Actually I think I just pointed out one of the major offenders, Japan.

That would require some major social engineering, like pairing up individuals with with high IQ's and making babies that would grow up and just possibly solve the problems. That would be assuming that these individuals would be willing. Tax the snot out of the lower IQ problem makers and cut welfare families off from making babies just to get a 'raise'. Do not feed the starving children in Africa or anywhere else unless the food has birth control in it. It will never happen or course since that would be politically incorrect, and/or offensive to the religious types.

Of course the problem makers will go first, but then we problem solvers will have no one at the lower levels to grow and harvest food. Kind of a self defeating thing so I think we will all go.

At least one person sees this. The math says that even at the present level of 6.5 billion we will waste the planet. I am not grieving over the coming extinction event since my daughter even sees the problem and does not want children brought into this world. My blood line stops here and now. I don't want any grandchildren going through 'the end'.

If what you want is the Earth to return to its natural healthy state fastest, then you need to ramp up the birth rate of the talented problem solvers so they can even faster slow down the rate of the client class expansions.

As women all over the world gain power, even in poor areas, the birth rate is falling. And the smart women themselves have the moral authority to deal with it. As well as the more talented eggs.

http://www.daybrown.org/eugenix/eugenix.htm has been posted for years, with virtually no feedback. But let me summarize.

Smart white thirtysomething career women, seeing they are no longer so sexy, have given up on ever meeting Mr. Wright and gone to fertility clinics to select from among thousands of the most promising Y Chromosome lines. They wont have the perfect marriage, but are quite happy with the perfect baby.

This has been going on under the radar long enuf that their kids are now in graduate school. The 'problem solvers'. Whose education was fully funded by scholarships and grants, as we'd expect for the most talented and socially skilled kids.

For over 1000 years, the Vikings were the most widely traveled men on the planet. Only those with the most robust immune systems survived to return to Scandinavia. Thus today, they have more immune markers that are even resistant to HIV. They also have the lowest rates of genetic disease- hemophilia, sickle cell anemia, cystic fibrosis,...

So, this is what the smart women who looked into it selected, and thus why the video of their kids shows all tow heads.

Now, is this going to be reserved for only upscale white women, or in the name of 'equal opportunity' are we going to subsidize fertility clinic services for poor women of all races?

If the Taxpayers do, its win/win. The premature birth rate alone will fall far enuf to recover the cost. The healthier kids mean that momma will not need to take off from work so often, so their employers will see more PROFIT as production increases.

The smart girls in school wont be nearly so intimidated, rat on the bullies, and the violence rate will drop dramatically. Then too there's: http://www.sciencedaily.com/releases/2009/06/090605123237.htm

Which shows us why some gene pools have more of a gang problem. Those markers handed down on the Nordic Y chromosome wont be there, which has something to do with why the Nordic cultures have been so peaceful for so long. (The Viking macho men who loved war and domination stayed in the areas they conquered to rule, and didnt return their DNA)

When a woman has her mtDNA looked it, she will be advised of the risk or benefit ratio of using just sperm donation- fast & cheap, or the in vitro with more gifted mtDNA as well. Wanda Sykes jokes about her white kids not being recognized as hers, but if fertility clinic services for poor women were available in a community, people would get it.

I grant you that most poor women lack talent. But we see how their maternal instincts are perfectly adequate to raise kids, and its not hard to assess the personality profile to eliminate psychos.

All this would dramatically drive down the cost of social services in a community and encourage investment as employers see the talent that will be available in out years. And it would also vastly increase the number of problem solvers to deal with the economic/social/ecosystem.

The silence following this presentation is remarkable.

No you don't. There are plenty of potential talented problem solvers born, but most of them never end up in a position of solving any problems.

Some countries channel them into those positions, some channel them into positions where they can not harm society, some just ignore them and let them flounder, where most do not do anything "useful" in terms of problem solving.

Sputnik scared the heck out of the US and the 1960's was a time of great growth in the US twoard channeling the problem solvers into solving problems.
Unfortunately that has pretty much burnt out, and the current generation in power and comming up can't enhance, or even reproduce the work of their parents.

If you want an example, Popular Science recently released their archives to public viewing. Look at their December 1941 issue. On December 6, 1941 the US was a booming economy, with lots of consumer items in production and being developed. By December 8th, it was not, it had become almost overnight focused on war production.

The US economy never really recovered, post war recovery for Europe and Japan included the technological edge the US had being moved overseas.

Because of Sputnik, that trend was IMHO accelerated because the US went from farther and farther into tech development, while moving the actual manufacturing overseas. New things were being developed, but as soon as they could be, they were moved from US production to Germany and Japan.

Japan became too expensive, so they were moved to Tiawan, then Korea, now the PRC and India. Technology development went elesewhere too.

To keep this radio related Ten-Tec just announced at Dayton that they will be selling a designed and made in China radio. They will keep the high end products in the US, but this is the first of their low end ones. It's not technicaly outsourcing, it's OEMing (in the computer useage of the term) they bought the rights to an existing product.

Now most of the manufacturing in the world is in China and tech development is down outside of the US. If you looked at anything in your house or office and ignored the name on it, just looked at where it was made, where the components where made, the software inside (almost anything that uses electricity these days has a microprocessor in it) was developed, you would find it concentrated in 3 countries, and the US is NOT one of them.

The other problem is industrialization and growth in the poorer but more populated countries. Due to the success of the global warming carbon credit farce, less developed countries are being forced to delay or stop development to offset the demands of the less populated but more idustrialized ones.

This would be fine the carbon credit fees actually made it to these counrties and were used (and sufficient) to industrialize using "green" methods and materials, but they are not. So the poor are stuck using the same crap the richer countries gave up 50 years ago, but are penalized for doing so.

Why aren't there thousands of wind farms, solar farms, hydro power plants, millions of electric buses and cars in Africa, India, etc? Why do people still dry their shit to have fuel to cook their meals in clay huts with no clean water, heat, plumbing or electricity?

Why do a million people a year die from malaria, because DDT was banned to make some rich environmentalists happy, and no one cares enough to replace it? You don't need to replace it with another pesticide (dangerous or not), the cost of prevention and cure is about $10 a "client".

For about the cost of an olympic sized swiming pool in most places, you could prevent a MILLION deaths. Pardon me if I am not impressed by the EU buying one for Hamas.

Why don't these children have schools? Why don't they have universities? They don't need genius professors, there is enough on line material to educate them. They just need teachers, which there would be a surplus of if they did not die of malaria, AIDS, starvation, etc in childhood.

It does not have to cost a lot, back when I had a blog going, I discussed a satellite system for information delivery, which could deliver eBooks, audiobooks, etc for the cost of the uplink and about $500 a ground station. They could be delivered to low cost audio players, such as the stick of gum USB ones, run by AA rechargable batteries.

The players retail for less than $10, and cost a few dollars at the factory. The batteries cost about $1 each and will run a player for a day on a charge, and last for 3 years if recharged every day.

They could be used to provide news, entertainment and education to individuals without them having to be able read.

While most of them are not going to be the movers and shakers of their people nor their generation, there are millions (billions if you include China and India), how many do you need?

If they all have a basic education, and are not starving in the cold and dark, they will produce their leaders and problem solvers, even if one in a thousand or one in ten thousand, or one in a million.

As quality of life goes up, life expectancy goes up, and so on, they will volunteraly reduce their birth rate.

Exactly, why not spread that ability to what are now the poor and starving, by making them less poor and not starving.

> The silence following this presentation is remarkable.

That's because it's so full of racist bullshit that no one can read it long enough to figure out you do have something in it.

Instead of extending the benefits of your gene pool to the masses as it were, extend the benefits of your inteligence and ability to them. Improve their lives to the point where they by natural selection go through the same processes your ancestors went through to make you the superior human being you are.

It will take longer, and but it will get rid of those you want to anyway.

As Mark Twan said: "Soap and education are not as sudden as a massacre, but they are more deadly in the long run."

The British Petroleum BP Corporation has laughed at us stupid Americans for 34 days. They've ruined one of our greatest natural resources and decimated thousands of lives. Our government acts like it is scared to make a frowny-face at these English faggots.

We should seize all BP property for starters; but we won't because we gutless.

BP...with the so-called "Queen" a major stockholder...needs us to send a message. Don't spend a dime with these pricks as our way of saying "thank you for doing a greater act of terrorism against the US than ANYTHING ever done for which we went to war over.

One would need to stop buying Arco, as well. On the west side of the country, they are the primary provider of less expensive gasoline, and I doubt that one could get a lot of support for a boycott..

Yeah, it's not like WE as a country have an insatiable demand for oil...

It's too bad it happened, but if you think BP is the only one doing deep drilling in the Gulf and BP is the only one that can have an accident, I have a nice bridge to sell to you.

We bitch if we don't drill* for oil and we bitch if we do drill for oil and there is an accident. Can't have it both ways, pick one...

I have thought of that, people with high IQ's encouraged to have as many kids as they can, and educate them all through childhood so their brains can grow both mentally and physically. A challenged brain will develop better if the child is continually fed information or given problems to solve. The problem I am having is that people regard this view as unnatural or genetic engineering, hence very unpopular with the religious set.

Perhaps I should have said smart and free of genetic anomalies that could cause trouble like diabetes or some other form of problem. That

That is a definite "Maybe". The child needs to be mentally busy growing a bigger brain and bigger skull to hold it. The most critical years are from birth to about 10-12. After that it is merely a matter of keeping the brain as active as possible.

Screech, stop! The child needs to be mentored starting at an early age by someone actually smart themselves. A garden variety nanny thing would Gotta agree with you here Joe. IMO it is just "collateral damage" in doing the business of drilling. But if BP or any of these other companies are skirting around issues and safety (much like mining) - you have to hit them where it hurts - and we know where that is.

I haven't been to a BP in an extremely long time. Shell is where I usually go here in town, if I'm out of my area and need fuel (which doesn't happen often).... Speedway is where I usually go it seems.

Fair request, so here is your clue: According to a Jewish ham buddy of mine, 'shtupp' is the Yiddish word for 'f..k'. A later web search proved he was correct.

With lots of Jewish folks in Hollywood (and maybe even some of the censors), I'm sure somebody knew exactly what it meant and kept it in as a sly joke. So, the next time you watch the movie, you heard it here first. ;-)

Frankly, this will hurt the little guy who owns your local station, and their employees much more than it'll hurt BP.

The way it works in Connecticut (and probably in most parts of the country) is there are central terminals where they have huge tanks.
When a tanker comes in, it fills whatever tank(s) have room, and whoever supplied the gas gets paid. When a tank truck comes in to get gas for delivery to your local station - no matter what brand it is, it's filled from whatever tank they're currently emptying.

The difference is each brand has their own additives, so before they fill up the tank truck with maybe 10k gallons, they put in a tiny amount of the brand specific additives. (Kinda like adding salt to a hamburger)

Most of BP's money comes from filling the tanks before the gas is branded.

Well, it's handmade, and considerably less elaborate than I do with my own PC. A piece of paper with a 4x6 PC-printed photo of their towers at sunset; glued back-to- back with a piece of paper, same size, with typical data on it. I have a photo at this URL where I think it can be seen:

or

The scan quality is fine - the original was not highest quality. No matter - a QSL is a QSL!

If this means 6169.8, or 6170, it could be R. New Zealand at that time, and LSB might help to overcome some upper side interference - could that be it?

I assure you, if Americans boycotted every BP station, in fact EVERY DAMNED BRITISH PRODUCT OR SERVICE it would get their attention. BP's attitude from the start has been arrogant and unsympathetic and every American should be outraged. As late as yesterday...YESTERDAY !----a full 34 days after they have filled the Gulf of Mexico with their gushing oil they gave the US EPA the finger. The EPA asked them to use less toxic dispersants and BP told us to shove it.

But, we'll just roll over and let them continue to stick it in us.

As for the local station owners: boo-hoo. If every one of them shut down I gar-own-tee ya it would get the notice of the regional suppliers and trickle up into where the real corruption begins...the top.

We are so acclimated to having damned messages sent to us by the assholes that are running and ruining everything that it is overdue that we send a few "messages" of our own.

Of course, Americans are way too gutless to do anything like general strikes and boycotts. They've got us so fragmented and divided in this country that none of us agree on anything anymore. So BP will happily continue to shit on us knowing that such strikes and boycotts have effectively worked many times elsewhere but the mind-dead Americans would never consider such a thing.

I sincerely feel for the good people of the Gulf Coast states not to mention the disastrous effect on lives of animals, plants and the ecosystem. Knuckleheads like Joe don't seem to understand that when one thing gets out of balance it affects everything else. But he (and others) see no evil in this will savor the flavor of the Kool Aid they're drinking.

He has oil soaked birds at the Taxidermist even as we speak. Let's not mention the glossy 8 X 10 glossy photos of the dead and dying coastal creatures in his porn collection. 'Petroleum Pets' he calls them.

He claims the oily sheen turns him on.

Gander is - in Newfoundland?

Occasionally I can nab it here in California. Back east in the 1970's it was on all the time.

Yeah, tell me about it. We have been sending food for those starving children for about 40 years now and they grow up and make still more starving children. Some of the adults who once were starving children just grow up to be militants toting AK-47's and grenade launchers. If we didn't have so many bleeding hearts in this country nature could just take it's course.
It is a lose, lose, lose even worse situation.

Define stalker. Gregg is stalking Steve Kramer! Does that count? BTW, Steve Kramer ceased posting long before your Gregg ever got to rec.knives. Gregg's troll mates saw to that. I can't, for the life of

of his ilk as we have sufficient trolls of our own. What rec.knives needs is for some decent posters to post on-topic stuff about knives.

Make it a condition that all free food will have birth control for both men and women and watch the war lords stay clear of it. Baby problem solved. Only when they are capable of self support would this stop and they once again can have children. It seems simple enough but of course since we are a country of religious bleeding hearts it will probably continue forever.

On the mark. The North American midwest, and the US as a whole for that matter is the ONE and ONLY means of keeping alive a World population that could not support half of current numbers without US agricultural production.

Many believe that the drought/dustbowl of the 30s was some kind of a 500 year even in which almost no rainfall occured. Actually most areas recieved 50% of normal rainfall. Plenty of rainfall to support prairy grasses, but not corn or wheat. Such sever droughts are NOT 500 year events, but occur regularly every several decades.

A drop of as little as 25% in US food production in one year would have devasting effects in many regions, and should the drought continue for 3-5 years as was the case in the 30s, we would see anarchy in many areas.

CURRENT World populations simply cannot be supported indefinetly, much less continued growth.

It;s a ticking timebomb.

Bingo, and the big aquifers - like the Ogalalla under the southern Great Plains - have been drained almost dry too. We really need to reel back our numbers, nationally by at least half, and worldwide by an order of magnitude.

*Poor old Krypsis. His ONLY joy in life is to go on the internet and whinge and whine about certain posters whom HE happens to disagree with.
He is even under the impression he has his own personal "stalkers".
In reality he's a silly old fool, long past his use by date wasting good Aussie tax payers money by clinging on to life.

Time to be gone Krypto.....

There is an upside. Global warming has resulted in Southern farmers, after they've got their crops in, trucking equipment up to the Yukon.

We've all heard of the permafrost melting. What we dont here is that land is now being put into production of oats, rye, and potatoes. Same deal in Siberia. Chinese workers have been going up into Southern Siberia to put in veggies, and the Mongolian stock breeders are delighted with the increase in beef production.

Liberals forget the melted Arctic ocean evaporates water ice didnt, and now central Asia gets rain. The Canadian and Russian grain belts have moved over 100 miles north, vastly increasing the amount of fertile farmland over that lost in Bangladesh and other such lowlands.

But nobody has figured out what use to make of all the tropical farmers who no longer have viable land to work.

Global warming has also resulted in more rain coming up from Baja thru AZ & NM, and thence onto the Great Plains. The Ogallola is much less of a problem.

And while all that corn has lotsa carbs, the quality of the protein sux and that has led to even more stupid Mexicans. The corn they grew was much better for mental development, and if they switched to oats, there would be a dramatic improvement in mental development.

50-100 years ago, Northern kids were raised on oatmeal, southern kids on grits. And we see the much higher academic performance of the Northern state universities back then.

The long term logical solution is to have the talented women donate eggs for in vitro. Over a 18 month cycle a woman can produce 300 eggs to be fertilized by more promising Y chromosomes. Which have been collected from Med schools; altho I think there's some effort to get more diversity as from business and law schools.

While I'm all for improving the education and socialization of kids of welfare moms, you need to start with more promising DNA.

Yeah Bruce, that's what it meant - I just didn't bother to include the . :-)
According to that database, that sure could have been it.
Interestingly though, that database doesn't show in what modes. I didn't know that a station would do that, not very fan friendly to some of their listeners IMO....lol...not that it bothers me - but I'm sure many don't have receivers that can operate in that mode.

That may be a good question to some of the guys and gal in here that aren't living in the US. LIke BA being in S.Korea - does S.Korea have "their own" receivers? Do they have their version of Rat Shack over there? I'm sure (I would think) that many of these countries don't make receivers that have LSB/USB.

I'll give you the thrill (and that's what it is for you) to actually address you head on, but don't get used to it because I'm sure it won't happen again for another 20+ posts you make about me. Show me where I ever said " that Kramer was gone BEFORE I started posting over in rec knives." You can't because I never said it because that wasn't the case you ding dong head.

I simply posted over in rec knives about (imagine this) KNIVES you liar. Kramer and the DTS were in the middle of a spat. I had never heard of the guy / I never heard of the DTS / and I sure as heck never heard of you.....not that I know of - though you "say" you had/have posted over here before.

Kramer tried his best and typical bullcrap with me over in rec knives like he does everyone else and it didn't work with me and then he changed his tune towards me - at first he acted like my buddy - kinda like a former poster over here in RRS did to everyone. And will you please (I know I'm wasting my time asking and saying please) stop saying I post over in these other groups you keep talking about because it simply has not happened. Like I said a longgg time ago, if by chance I responded to a post in rec knives that was crossposted I said I apologize - - and I now make a point to see if I'm responding to something that has been crossposted over into other groups and if it is - I then take them out and only respond in the group I am reading. Just because you keep saying the same lies over and over about me and others doesn't mean it's true. Are you trying to make people here in RRS think that I started posting over in rec knives and

Kramer had already stopped posting there.....but I just made a point to talk about someone that had never spoken to me? That's not my nature pal, but it's yours. It's all there in the archives, knock yourself out. What a ding dong head <shaking my head and rolling my eyes>

Cannot hear anything on any of these channels.Very strange, they used to transmit reliably over many,many years. Did they switch over to some other type of service,like satellite?

You big fat liar, you're cracking me up Krypsie. You either know what you're saying isn't the truth and saying it anyhow or you're mentally retarded (not that there's anything wrong with that.) You pick.

Idiot. I posted more questions and responses ABOUT KNIVES in two weeks then you had/have in three months. EVERYONE over there knows who the troublemaker is K - just because you say otherwise doesn't make it so.

Ha! I think you know me better than that. Like I said before -NEVER-have I had anyone follow me around usenet like this clown....that says it all right there. If I was the troublemaker, there would be a pattern would there not? Pretty ironic that I get along fine with EVERYONE in EVERY group I post to except this ass clown and Kramer and our former buddy Bryant who was loved by all in here. It's like he thinks he's going to try an scare me to the point that I never mention him or his butt buddy and that simply isn't going to happen.

He keeps saying the same lie, saying that I never spoke to The Bankok Banger directly. I mean, is the dude high (like our former fake professor) or just a habitual liar? I think it's a combination of both. I'm not going to bother going back in the archives to prove to others what I already know - it ain't happening.

That might have been before Renowned True Christian Patriot, Pat Robertson, said he wanted to have Chavez killed.

Pat Robertson has also said the Haiti earthquake was caused by the Haitians making a deal with the Devil two hundred years ago.

He hasn't said who the US has made a deal with in order to deserve BP. Must have been one Evil Dude.

Has Christianity sank so LOW that they need this deviant spreading bullshit masquerading as the voice of God?

That's a pretty intereting article. I was listening to a Philly station last week sometime and the guest was talking about the IPad - and he said americans aren't ready for this technology. I thought he meant literally and maybe in his own way - that's what he thinks.

I don't know nothing about the IPad but apparently to this guy he said "it would turn every american into a spy of sorts." He said the technology in that device and if the person truly knew how to use it to it's maximum - that anyone who owned that would have the abilities like the CIA and the other alphabet agencies.

Pretty interesting interview, maybe more of the tech savvy people could comment on what he meant exactly and what this device is truly capable of if in the hands of the right/wrong person.

Yeah - I get you there Bob. I meant over in other countries, if someone was listening to what I was and didn't have a receiver with the capability they would have been SOL. I know the ones in here more than likely can copy SSB on their receivers. I also know that receivers can be basically purchased anywhere, but I'm sure in some of the other countries or third world - maybe they can't afford that. I've seen enough shows on tv, just not even a week ago that Andrew Zimmer {sp} (kind of heavy guy) fella he travels the world and eats strange cuisine from other countries.

There were two seperate places/scenes in that one show where the people were squatting/sitting around a radio and I could tell (I'd bet on it) that those radios didn't have SSB capability. I never even thought of a "literal" Radio Shack being in those types of countries but I'm sure there has to be someone producing those radios or parts for the old ones? Who knows.

Well, as I said 6.5 billion as too much already. We need to shrink the

Hi Mark,

Finally....finally....finally! Somebody who knows how oil is moved, refined then sold on the open market. Boycotting BP will be as effective as boycotting McDonalds. As the saying goes....it ain't gonna work kids. I don't like what I see in the Gulf either but it comes down to the fact that we are an energy consuming nation......fossil fuel energy. We will never be able to "completely" ween ourselves off of oil no matter how much we cut back. We still need oil for lubrication and most importantly.....PLASTICS!
That's right. Anything you see of plastic, whether hard or soft, it came from oil. All of your synthetic fabrics are from oil as well.

Some are wondering, what about the recycling? It's all good too but how does the recycled material get to its main destination? Hmmmm....trucks. And they run on diesel, which is lower refined oil. So no matter how you slice it, energy in fossil fuel form is needed for today's economic engine, as well as the future.

Heh, the crew just said, interestingly enough that they were giving the OK on the descent and the crew said "they have a new antenna up."
Pretty cool - hope everything works out well and everything goes smooth.

Yeah, no doubt. I remember for years I had every freq that had seen action on the take offs and landings. It was like a holiday for me, for some reason I just kind of lost the zest a bit. I guess I just got into different aspects of the hobby all together. But it'll definitely be great if everything goes fine.

Did you or anyone else in here copy the Challenger tragedy, was that the name I forget? Now that would have been something to hear, not to sound too morbid.

These writers were talking about bankers and "the money power," not "rich people" in general.

They were referring to the fact -- not known to most Americans, because the topic has been made taboo by the ethnically-distinct media billionaires -- that banks were and are allowed to create money out of thin air, and the fact that this creation of money gives the bankers tremendous and unearned power.

Contrast them with an intelligent and productive man who attained wealth by, say, building a railroad (as a friend of mine has done) where one was needed, or by creating new and better radio communications systems (as Art Collins did), and the difference is unmistakable.

Such people rarely enter the billionaire class, but they bear the terrible brunt of the "soak the rich" taxation promoted by moronic moderns, which always has provisions to protect the wealth of the billionaire elite and is welcomed by them as a way of preventing any upstarts from rising to challenge their power.

Someone "rising to challenge their power" is exactly what is needed.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

In a recent article at the Huffington Post, Lynn Parramore assembled a team of economists to refute nine "myths" about the deficit. On the one hand, it was refreshing to see these economists discuss with such candor the fact that our financial system is backed up by nothing but green pieces of paper. On the other hand, it was shocking to see these economists laud the fact.

OK Dave - I know what you're saying but do you care to expound a little more than that? Are you familiar with the IPad - not the IPhone? I wished I had taped the guest and show but I was out in my <ahem> shed at the time and just enjoying the ambiance.

I know I'm definitely going to be reading up on this piece because apparently it has some people skeered but many of the callers on the show were loving it. I remember when I got into the monitoring hobby and realized that basically if it's in the airwaves - I can hear it - if you know the right people and know the "work arounds" irregardless of what some group of people vote on because they don't want you to hear them. The saying "Nothing's Sacred" when it comes to copying a signal is oh so true though the gubiment has put a damper on many of the things one can hear - or so they think.

I'm hoping - really hoping - that I may have the opportunity to pick up a piece as "pay back" for some things I did for a fine older gentleman a few years back at NO CHARGE.....and no weirdo statements. ;-) It'll be my granddaddy of all of my equipment and I can be "as bad as I wanna be." <heh>

At least consider the underlying theme--that government has a duty to provide sufficient money to sustain the economy, and that government is the source of money. When an economy has the potential for expansion, the government should make additional money available. The government should curtail spending and reduce the money supply only when the economy is at maximum production and more money simply leads to inflation.

The Republicans have it all backwards. The Bush administration not only spent money like drunken bank robbers, they also spent the money of useless wars and overseas adventures. They not only opened the money vaults to big business, they also shoveled the money to nonproductive investment banks, hedge funds, and international gamblers.

The Republicans kept a loose money policy even while America's production facilites were being transferred overseas and America' manufacturing base was shrinking. The result was the collapse of the United States monetary system and the economy.

And now that crippled US economy is rebounding and more money is needed to fund the expanding activity, the Republicans oppose government spending and expanding the money supply, the exact opposite of what is needed right now. The spendthrift Republicans who allowed international money changers to scoop up and gamble away most of the available cash have now become thrifty nannies who think the way to prosperity is for government to sit back and allow the international bankers to control the rate of America's recovery.

Advances in science and technology have allow for what for all entents and purposes is a population that simply cannot be sustained over the long term. Mother Nature holds the ultimate trump card.

Unfortunetely for many, your numbers may be quite accurate.

You have a mutual fund or 401? Bet you have oil stocks in it. And probably BP as well. Let us know when you liquidate these.

So - how big a proportion of extracted oil is used for things other than fuel? And how much is incinerated into the air?

If nobody buys BP oil, you can bet BP will get the message when their sellers don't want their stock.

Our recycling trucks here run on landfill LNG, not diesel. They could easily run on other things too, as long as somebody can see past the end of their nose and this year's immediate bottom line.

Big deal. IF he, or any president, avoided vacations whenever any crisis occurred, most of them would never leave the White House. You take a tiny slice of his tenure and make believe that's the norm? God almighty, look at what Bush did - he bicycled and brush-cleared hsi

I never said I didn't - but I am willing to see them go down, collapse in fact, if it helps get BP and every oil company the message...so your logic is no good here.

And, it looks like it's working - BP stock is doing rather poorly right now, as it should.

So keep on shilling for the oil companies, the poor fellows need all the help they can get!

I think an order of magnitude drop - well under a billion - is probably more like it. What other large, gluttonous mammal numbers anywhere near what we humans do?

We could do this in three generations if every couple just had one child born and then grow to maturity.

There's no scarcity of goods, and soon, thanks to this crisis, they'll be piling up in warehouses all over the world.

There's a scarcity of consumers with enough cash to buy those goods.
That's why the world will probably go into some kind of deflationary spiral quite soon.

With you, Dave.

A person's basic commodity needs are good quality food, clothing of appropriate warmth and somewhat better than decent shelter. Everything else is a luxury to some extent. Nothing against luxury - I love it...but it is pretty tough to argue that a person making over 100,000k per annum in 2010 is not living substantially beyond his needs, unless he's supportng a family of 20. Should it all be taken away? Of course not - if he earned it. But, when a person has amassed, say, $10,000,000 and continues to suck up the wealth, it's pretty hard to find an excuse for that when it could be helping desperate but hard-working people have the basic needs of life. Not luxury - just basic needs.

Unfortunately this is true. Enormous worker productivity and endless cheap imports along with lack of domestic largesse have seen to that.

And by the way, in case you haven't noticed - a deflationary spiral is not nearly as good as it sounds!!!

Perhaps they are reading here too... I now (1445 utc) hear a fair signal on 13270 and very weak on 10051, ID as New York Radio! Perhaps they ran one of their (low-)power-tests as mentioned by RHF.

But it is _exactly_ that kind of "redistribution" that causes the proliferation and out-of-control reproduction of the problem-makers. Absent such support, they'd have far less ability to increase their biomass. If such aid were linked to a foolproof means of ensuring that their gene-patterns would not reproduce, it would be a different story.

And re millionaires:

It's the $10- or $20-million guys who have the best potential of mounting a serious challenge to the billionaire oligarchs. That's why those oligarchs _love_ "soak the rich" tax policies and promote them in their media. It keeps their potential competition down.

Putin had a better way of dealing with oligarchs. Jail them for their financial crimes and seize their ill-gotten fortunes, while leaving the productive and inventive wealthy alone to benefit the Nation.

With all good wishes,

Ah, another Gold Adorer.

That "green piece of paper" represents the trust that the world accords to the US success. It could be pictures of naked Elvis instead, it matters not.

Incidentally, if the US sold all of its gold to pay for the deficit, it wold cover only a very small fraction.

Stop adoring false prophets, you are kindly advised.

Soros Warns of Market Crash
Thursday, 15 Apr 2010 10:58 AM Article Font Size
Railway porter-turned-billionaire financier George Soros delivered a stark warning that the financial world is on the wrong track and that it may be hurtling towards an even bigger boom and bust than in the credit crisis.
The man who ‘broke’ the Bank of England (and who is still able to earn a cool $3.3 billion in a year) said the same strategy of borrowing and spending that had got us out of the Asian crisis could shunt the financial world towards another crisis unless tough lessons are learned.
Soros, who worked as a porter to pay for his studies at the London School of Economics after emigrating from Hungary, warned the financial world to heed the lesson that modern economics had got it wrong and that markets are not inherently stable.

“The success in bailing out the system on the previous occasion led to a superbubble, except that in 2008 we used the same methods,” he told a meeting hosted by The Economist at the City of London’s modern and impressive Haberdashers’ Hall.
“Unless we learn the lessons, that markets are inherently unstable and that stability needs to the objective of public policy, we are facing a yet larger bubble.
One crumb of comfort could be the 10-year period between the 1998 Asian crisis and the 2008 credit crisis. If the pattern is repeated, it should at least mean we have another eight years to go before the next crash.

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Pt4VLX96VLM The same people who complained about the widening wealth gap now think the new money printing and borrowing is such a wonderful and necessary policy forget it helps the rich the most. The policies are intended to avoid depressing asset prices which has the effect of shrinking the wealth gap. Who owns most of the assets if not the wealthy? How do you stop asset price deflation? By inflation. Who suffers most from inflation? Poor people. Who benefits most from inflation? Rich people who own assets. Evidently change we can believe in is no change. A Benjamin Franklin quote from 1787 follows. We, in our enlightened age, know his views to be completely without merit and that Muslim terrorists from oil producing countries made him say it.

==========

"I fully agree with General Washington, that we must protect this young nation from an insidious influence and impenetration. That menace, gentlemen, is the Jews. In whatever country Jews have settled in any great number, they have lowered its moral tone; depreciated its commercial integrity; have segregated themselves and have not been assimilated; have sneered at and tried to undermine the Christian religion upon which that nation was founded by objecting to its restrictions; have built up a state within a state; and when opposed have tried to strangle that country to death financially, as in the case of Spain and Portugal.

For over 1700 hundred years, the Jews have been bewailing their sad fate in that they have been exiled from their homeland, as they call

Palestine. But, gentlemen, did the world give it to them in fee simple, they would at once find some reason for not returning. Why? Because they are vampires, and vampires do not live on vampires. They cannot live only amongst themselves. They must subsist on Christians and other people not of their race. If you do not exclude them from these United States in the Constitution, in less than 200 years they will have swarmed here in such great numbers that they will dominate and devour the land, and change our form of government, for which we Americans have shed our blood, given our lives, our substance, and jeopardized our liberty. If you do not exclude them, in less than 200 years our descendants will be working in the fields to furnish them substance, while they will be in the counting houses rubbing their hands.

I warn you, gentlemen, if you do not exclude the Jews for all time, your children will curse you in your graves. Jews, gentlemen, are Asiatics, let them be born where they will or how many generations they are away from Asia, they will never be otherwise. Their ideas do not conform to an American's, and will not even though they live among us ten generations. A leopard cannot change its spots. Jews are Asiatics, are a menace to this country if permitted entrance, and should be excluded by this Constitutional Convention."

While you are at it, how about a citation detailing the contributions from BP. The only thing I heard recently were the vague and unsubstantiated insinuations from Sarah Palin.

At least consider the underlying theme--that government has a duty to provide sufficient money to sustain the economy, and that government is the source of money. When an economy has the potential for expansion, the government should make additional money available. The government should curtail spending and reduce the money supply only when the economy is at maximum production and more money simply leads to inflation.

President Roosevelt (D) took the US off the gold standard in the 30's.
The gold standard required the Treasury Dept to print only as much money as the value of gold held by the government. Taking the US off the gold standard allowed the government to print more money than the value of it's gold to pay for Roosevelt's New Deal programs.
The money printed was to be backed by the good faith of the government and the strength of the American economy.
The US economy is in the toilet and the government is printing money faster than McDonald's can make french fries.
Economic meltdown is on it's way.

The Republicans have it all backwards. The Bush administration not only spent money like drunken bank robbers, they also spent the money of useless wars and overseas adventures. They not only opened the money vaults to big business, they also shoveled the money to nonproductive investment banks, hedge funds, and international gamblers.

The Republicans kept a loose money policy even while America's production facilites were being transferred overseas and America' manufacturing base was shrinking. The result was the collapse of the United States monetary system and the economy.

And now that crippled US economy is rebounding and more money is needed to fund the expanding activity, the Republicans oppose government spending and expanding the money supply, the exact opposite of what is needed right now. The spendthrift Republicans who allowed international money changers to scoop up and gamble away most of the available cash have now become thrifty nannies who think the way to prosperity is for government to sit back and allow the international bankers to control the rate of America's recovery.

Yup. The Republican goal has always been the destruction of government.
They have attempted doing so by destruction of the currency and by creating massive debt.

It hasn't collapsed YET. The Republicans are into that part of the plan at this point.

They WANT a depression where the rich Republicans that were awarded all the money by the Republican government can lord it over the productive servants. The proper way forward is a devaluation of the money by printing more of it and a tax system that keeps this new money out of the hands of the current money holders (the Republican thieves).

This is one time I wish I was wrong but the math doesn't lie. People keep thinking technology will allow unlimited population growth but it can't happen. Even the oceans are just about fished out but people just see the pretty blue water and don't think about what is happening below the surface.
Reality is a bitch, but we can't alter the fact that we will wipe out the planet.

None. And none have the power to recklessly destroy the planet, but we sure can thanks to 'technology'.

Never gonna happen. Catholics, or Christians seem to think they are ordained to have as many kids as they can. We might get up to the 8 billion mark before we have a catastrophic event, like a super volcano putting us in the permanent winter for 3 years or so. It has happened before and many people just starved to death. Yellowstone is a prime candidate as it is known to be a super volcano. If it erupts It would not only take out a few stated but the ash in the stratosphere would give us a 3 or 4 year winter.
Human nature is "Me, Me, and Me", so get ready.

While you are at it, how about a citation detailing the contributions from BP. The only thing I heard recently were the vague and unsubstantiated insinuations from Sarah Palin.

I never said I didn't - but I am willing to see them go down, collapse in fact, if it helps get BP and every oil company the message...so your logic is no good here.

And, it looks like it's working - BP stock is doing rather poorly

So keep on shilling for the oil companies, the poor fellows need all

Big deal. IF he, or any president, avoided vacations whenever any crisis occurred, most of them would never leave the White House. You take a tiny slice of his tenure and make believe that's the norm? God almighty, look at what Bush did - he bicycled and brush-cleared hsi

Yes but I notice your lack of outrage here. Of course it would be altogether different if we had a Republican prez right now. If it wisent for the lefts double standard, they would have no standards.

ALL PERSONS _MUST_ Read this article if they are to have _ANY_ understanding of our actual money system:

http://www.huffingtonpost.com/lynn-parramore/the-deficit-nine-myths-we_b_553527.html ----------

Myth #1: The government should balance its books like a private household.
Reality: Our federal government is the issuer of the currency, which makes its budget fundamentally different than the average citizen's.

Myth #2: Fixing Social Security and Medicare will require "tough choices."
Reality: Social Security and Medicare are not facing a financial crisis.

Myth #3: We are passing on debt to our grandchildren.
Reality: Payments on Treasury securities are a matter of data entry, not a financial burden.

Myth #4: What we don't tax we have to borrow from the likes of China for our children to pay back.
Reality: Paying our debt holders back consists of transferring funds between accounts.

Myth #5: The government must tax or borrow to get money to spend.
Reality: Government spending is not constrained by revenue.

Myth #6: Deficits and government borrowing takes away savings.
Reality: Deficits add to income and savings.

Myth #7: We'll end up just like Weimar Germany or Zimbabwe.
Reality: Hyperinflation in both countries was caused by circumstances far different than ours.

Myth #8: Government spending increases interest rates and 'crowds out' valuable private sector investment.
Reality: Banks can lend essentially without limit, and the Fed can hit any interest rate target it chooses.

Myth #9: The money spent paying interest on the national debt could be spent elsewhere.
Reality: Interest rates can easily be brought to zero and are not an obstacle to federal spending.

ALL OF THESE MYTHS ARE BASED ON THE SAME FUNDAMENTAL MISUNDERSTANDING CONCERNING MONEY AND DEBT THAT ENDED IN 1973 WHEN THE LAST LINK TO GOLD WAS SEVERED. THE MYTH OF MONEY HAVING INTRINSIC VALUE OR MONEY BEING "TIED TO" SOMETHING OF INTRINSIC VALUE JUST WON'T DIE. IT IS RELIGIOUS ORTHODOXY OF THE WORST SORT.

BP donated US$500M to LBNL and UC during Steven Chu's tenure there,

How so? What is this supposed to mean? Are the Republicans going to get elected and come after me with their guns? Unless that's a veiled threat, I seriously doubt that I will need any help.

Yes, it is logic - I am willing to take a loss for the long-term greater good. I guess you have a problem with that philosophy - but then compassion and altruism was never your strong suit.

You noticed nothing because I have not expressed it. I am outraged, livid in fact, that Obama so far appears to have let so much of this crisis slide by. That by no means takes the blame off the previous Admins, under whom this whole sordid system began.

Wanna talk about a double standard?

What party has traditionally been the staunchest ally of BIG OIL?

What party now tries to point the finger at a Liberal because he was caught off-guard?

What party is now crying because their constituents' livelihoods are being crushed by the very industry they have long supported?

Give ya a hint - they're all the same answer.

You can grouse all you like, but as a liberal I have NEVER supported offshore drilling or extraction, and I have no sympathy for any politician right or left who has supported it or has been asleep at the wheel when tragedy strikes. If you can find a double standard there, you're a magician...or else a liar, take your pick.

Bruce, let me respectfully disagree. Gregg DID bring trouble here if you recall, he brought over 'nurk' and others during the wars about the professor guy at the Kentucky college. Then nurk and company hung around RRS for awhile afterwords, engaging in various forms of mischief.

To support this contention, let me quote from nurk's post of 5/25/10:

If Gregg purposely invited these troublemakers over to cause trouble here (which nurk admits to above), I don't know how you can say Gregg does not "bring trouble here".

Generally I agree with you, but I think your memory is a little faulty on this one.

So, confirm it. An honest look will reveal a pretty lopsided political constituency. BTW, what business did Bushie start in 1978, again?

No, he wasn't. That storm had several days of fair warning from NOAA scientists - but then, science was not his "thing" was it? Anyway - you also won't see me thrusting all the blame at Bush for what happened with Katrina - the first response in that case should have been from the State and the City, neither of whom had the foggiest idea what they were doing when the ocean rose 30 feet. What happened afterward should have gradually morphed into a federal emergency program (which it did, poorly).

Thank you to both for these good articles. From the Reuters:

"Make no mistake: BP ranks among the most powerful corporate forces in U.S. politics," said Dave Levinthal, spokesman for the Center for Responsive Politics. "It donates hundreds of thousands of dollars every election cycle through its employees and political action committee and is routinely a seven- or eight-figure federal lobbying powerhouse each year."

In 2008 alone, BP gave $37,000 to members of the House Energy Committee and $106,501 to members of the Senate Homeland Security Committee, which deals with security issues facing the nation's oil supply.

BP has also evolved in its corporate giving over the past decade, shifting more money to Democrats. In 2000, the company gave almost 39 percent more to Republicans than to Democrats. But by 2008, Democrats had nearly pulled even with Republicans on BP donations.

Moreover, the company has nearly tripled the amount of money it has spent on lobbying, from about $5.7 million in 1999 to $15.9 million last year, according to lobbying disclosures."

Recall that the Supreme Court, less than a year ago, also eliminated the limits on how much a wealthy company, oops, I mean, an individual person, can use for purposes related to politics. Now, whatever measly limits there may have been have been utterly dashed, and BP and their fellow "individual persons" will be able to win all the elections their money can buy.

So, being 'Greek', a 'socialist' and an 'emigrant' has just exactly what to do with the Greek economy collapsing?

Presumably, you are an American (and unless you are a Native American, you are also an emigrant)...so to follow your reasoning, that would make you responsible for the current American Depression.

Joe, understood, but each person is responsible for his own actions.
I don't fault Gregg for Nurk, and anyway, I choose not not to read Nurk's stuff. I like Gregg, I think his transgressions are small, that's my story and I'm stickin' to it :-)

Plus, I was away for awhile, and I may have missed the MB thing (which was way overblown, although MB was his own worst enemy). Still, he's

So - how big a proportion of extracted oil is used for things other than fuel? And how much is incinerated into the air?

If nobody buys BP oil, you can bet BP will get the message when their sellers don't want their stock.

Our recycling trucks here run on landfill LNG, not diesel. They could easily run on other things too, as long as somebody can see past the end of their nose and this year's immediate bottom line.

Bruce Jensen

A few trucks using LNG isn't going to cut. Even 10,000 trucks across the country won't cut it. Natural gas is a great play but there are a couple big problems with it. Transportation, (safety and mass quantities) and storage. First, transporting LNG is very volatile and can only be done is small quantities at a time. It would take multiple deliveries of LNG per day to just keep up with the demand at the station. Unlike the distribution of gasoline every other day or so depending on how sales are. Storage would be a regulatory hell at the filling station. To keep LNG in the proper form, liquid, it needs to be kept cold. Basically, a freezer unit to keep the tank cold so the gas doesn't expand prematurely. So we're back at the use of electricity to keep the compressors running. Solar? It's supplemental, not primary so you need a steady source.

'Immigrant' is someone who comes INTO your country. 'Emigrant' is someone who LEAVES your country.

Excellent points. Without the North American "bread basket" I doubt the planet could support half that are alive today, and only a couple of poor crop years could lead to the deads of millions.

The drought of the 1930s was no 1000 year event. Meteorologists and geologists have shown it can occur every several decades and amounted to only an approx. 50% decrease in annual rainfall. The Ogallala Aquifer would of course be of some help, but much of it is located in areas that REQUIRE irrigation given "normal" seasonal rainfall, and water tables have already seen significant falls in many areas prompting a ban on further well drilling. IMO the current World population is a giant ticking timebomb.

Actually, the Christian nations are not breeding enough to maintain their culture. Europe is in serious decline as far as numbers of white Christians go. The problems of overpopulation are in Africa and India and the Muslim countries....the ones that can't produce enough food to feed themselves but have large families anyway.

God will provide...they still think, but America ends up sending them food and gets called the Great Satan. Easy to see where the brains got distributed.

Although India is now self-sustaining since the Americans bred some miracle rice for them. Another big Christian inspired mistake.

No need to devalue the currency. Inflation only occurs when the money supply exceeds the nation's ability to expand production. Right now the United States is operating at a fraction of its ability to produce, mainly because of the shortage of available cash caused by eight years of Republican mismanagement and the profligacy of international money shufflers.

What most people don't realize is how much capital simply disappeared in the hectic gambling antics of the big investment banks and hedge funds. The notional value of all those wierd derivative trades amounted to tens of trillions of dollars.

The big Wall Street gamblers borrowed gobs of money from the commercial banks--represented by account entries--then lost it and reneged on paying the commercial banks back--represented by account entries--leaving the commercial banks with little capital and books full of bad loans. The effect was that gobs of money was taken out of commerce and effectively lost to commerce and industry.

Now the government must make new capital available to commerce and industry to allow the economy to recover. And the same people responsible for the near collapse are standing in the way of recovery by demanding that the government stop injecting needed currency into the economy.

Fine. Why shouldn't the OTHER recipients of Payola send theirs back

As it stands, the oil/coal/sugar/money cartels have the whole political well said.

You don't have to be a Keynesian to recognize that the economics of belt-tightening is a fool's errand in a recession:the combination of financial collapse and deflation helped create depression, dictatorship, and then World War II

Get a Grip: Austerity Does Not Produce Prosperity Austerity has suddenly become the universally prescribed cure for the fallout from the financial collapse. If widely adopted, it will prove worse than the disease. The price of the rescues of Greece, Spain and Portugal will be brutal deflation. The International Monetary Fund, which supposedly learned from its earlier mistakes of imposing austerity on already damaged economies, is back in cold-bath mode, demanding higher taxes and dramatically reduced spending as its pound of flesh. The European Central Bank and key leaders of the E.U. are promoting economic pain as the price of relief. Here at home, President Obama has sworn off serious new outlays for jobs or aid to the states, and is using his fiscal commission to pursue a bipartisan consensus on spending cuts and higher taxes. The nations of the European Union are being treated as the object lesson in the costs of profligacy. This is supposedly what happens when you provide decent social benefits to regular people. In fact, most of Europe had reasonably well-disciplined budgets until a made-on- Wall-Street economic crisis took down their economies. The budget deficit here and overseas does need to return to a more moderate level -- after we get an economic recovery. But the problem with the austerity treatment during a recession is that if everyone tightens their belts at once, there is nobody to buy the products; the economy shrinks and repayment of debt is even more arduous. As John Maynard Keynes famously wrote, "The patient does not need rest. He needs exercise." You don't have to be a Keynesian to recognize that the economics of belt-tightening is a fool's errand in a recession. With the exception of a few smaller nations, the large deficits in the OECD countries are not the result of fiscal profligacy, but of revenue losses caused by the downturn. And in the case of Greece, supposedly the poster child for profligacy, the new Socialist Papandreou government is having to clean up after the fiscal finagling of its conservative predecessor. Greece certainly needs tax reform to make sure that so many of its very wealthy do not hide their assets. It does not need general austerity. The US has been spared this phase of the crisis so far, because the Federal Reserve has been willing to be buyer of last resort of all manner of securities, including government debt. This remedy is far from ideal, and it needs to be wound down as soon as recovery comes, as well as combined with structural reforms. But the Fed rescue certainly beats a total collapse In Europe, by contrast, this rescue act is far more difficult politically and institutionally. Sovereignty is divided along nations pursuing their own self-interests, a fledgling E.U. and a central bank that lacks either the Fed's full powers, its history, or its self- confidence. But Europe had better come through this test as a more unified and politically effective system or we will all suffer. This is no time for skeptics of the Euro or the E.U. to be gloating. In fact, the Germans and the French have put their self-interest aside, and have pushed for a rescue plan that prevents default on government bonds and benefits Europe's less affluent nations. With aid to Greece monumentally unpopular, German Chancellor Angela Merkel was willing to lose a key state election in order to prevent a Euro collapse This statesmanship is admirable -- but the austerity demands are not. The current global economic crisis, now entering a new phase as a crisis of sovereign debt, has only one rough precedent. The last time major nations (such as Germany, its European creditors, and much of Latin America) faced insolvency, the combination of financial collapse and deflation helped create depression, dictatorship, and then World War II. In the US, we finally ended the Great Depression with massive wartime borrowing and public outlay. We ended the war with a debt-to-GDP ratio of more than 120 percent, more than double today's ratio. In Britain, debt-to-GDP peaked at about 250 percent. But all of the war spending recapitalized industry, re-employed and trained jobless workers; and after the war pent up consumer demand powered a record boom and rising revenues paid down the debt. There was plenty of wartime sacrifice, but it was shared. Citizens bought war bonds and used ration books. There were wage and price controls. Surtaxes on high incomes were over 90 percent. Interest rates were administered through a deal between the Treasury and the Fed, and the war debt was financed with cheap money. Inflation rose slightly after the war, but was manageable. And thanks to the deferred demand and careful economic management of the war years, peacetime conversion brought not a recession but a boom. Today's situation is different. The origin of all the debt is not a war but a financial collapse. The new round of financial panic is the result of still fearful markets, a still fragile banking system, and deficits caused mainly by reduced output, not overspending. In this context, it is insane to think that we can recover from a financial panic and an economic recession by inducing a worse recession in the name of fiscal soundness. For now, while the real economy heals, there is no substitute for aggressive central bank intervention to restore markets in sovereign debt. The right grand bargain is tough financial reform and limits on Wall Street--so that this crisis is never repeated. The wrong grand bargain is austerity for everyone else. Robert Kuttner's new book is "A Presidency in Peril." He is co-editor of The American Prospect and a senior fellow at Demos.

I remember a group of upscale well educated upper income people living in a communal house in New Orleans. Since each only had to support a room, and only their share of the commons like the kitchen & living room, the per capita carbon footprint was low enuf, that on a global basis, it could support 8 or more billions.

Exactly! And Gregg's action was specifically, purposely, intentionally bringing over the troublemakers. See, we do agree! :-)

Why not? I do. Nurk (and the other troublemakers) were brought over -specifically- by Gregg's invite. Whom would you fault, if not Gregg?

On further reflection, it looks like we can agree to disagree.

I do have to wonder why the underclass is so intent on over-breeding and Does anyone have any frequencies? I used to listen to them during the last solar peak. Back then even the Mississippi barge traffic came in and was very interesting to listen to at times.

South Korea has reportedly resumed propaganda broadcasts into North Korea amid heightened tensions on the Korean peninsula over the sinking of a South Korean patrol boat on March 26 that left 46 sailors dead.

The resumption of cross-border broadcasts after a break of six years came as Seoul warned it would no longer tolerate provocations from the North after blaming the sinking on a North Korean torpedo attack.

On Tuesday army engineers began installing loudspeakers along the tense border with the North, with plans to also construct 11 giant electronic signboards.

Meanwhile, the South Korean defence ministry said it had resumed FM radio broadcasts on Monday evening, starting with a four-hour programme entitled Voice of Freedom, which was being aired three times a day.

Messages on freedom

A spokesman told the AFP news agency the programme included messages on freedom and democracy from a military anchorwoman, a song from a South Korean girl band extolling freedom of choice, and pointed comments on how obesity rather than hunger is a problem in the South.

KPA Front Commander Opens Written Warning to Lee Myung Bak

Pyongyang, May 24 (KCNA) -- The commander of forces of the Korean People's Army in the central sector of the front Monday issued the following open written warning addressed to the Lee Myung Bak group of traitors as regards the puppet military gangsters attempt to resume the anti-DPRK psychological warfare in the areas along the Military Demarcation Line against the backdrop of its evermore undisguised moves to escalate confrontation with the DPRK:

Timed to coincide with the evermore undisguised moves to resume the psychological warfare against the DPRK in the areas along the MDL, there appeared a slogan for the said warfare at MP post 330 of the puppet Third Infantry Division in the Demilitarized Zone in the central sector of the front and it is set to install even louder speaker for resuming the broadcasting as part of the said warfare.

This is an open breach of the inter-Korean military agreement, a grave military provocation to the DPRK and a serious incident driving the inter-Korean relations to the worst phase.

The KPA soldiers are now greatly enraged by this provocation of the group of traitors and asking for the issue of an order to blow up such means for the psychological warfare as the new slogan and louder speaker with their sighting shots.

Requested by the soldiers and upon the authorization of the superior, I serve the south Korean group of traitors the following warning:

1. The slogan for psychological warfare against the DPRK carved on a wall of the building of MP post 330 should be immediately removed and those involved in the crime sternly punished.

2. In case the above-said slogan is left as it is and such new means for the said warfare as louder speaker are set up, defying our demand, there will start the firing of direct sighting shots to destroy them.

If the group of traitors challenges the just reaction of the DPRK, this will be followed by stronger physical strike to eliminate the root cause of the provocations.

US Anti-DPRK Smear Campaign Blasted

Pyongyang, May 22 (KCNA) -- The U.S. imperialists' ever-more undisguised smear campaign against the DPRK to isolate and stifle it is no more than despicable behaviors of those seized by extreme uneasiness and fret about the tremendous power of the DPRK winning one victory after another, says Rodong Sinmun Saturday in a signed article.

The U.S., aware that it can never bring the DPRK to its knees by force of arms as all its people are under arms and its whole territory has turned into a fortress, seeks to realize its ambition for aggression on the DPRK at any cost by employing all non-military means, the article observes, and goes on:

One of them is psychological warfare.

This psychological warfare of the U.S. is aimed at creating illusion about capitalism, discontent with the socialist system, etc. among Korean people in a bid to realize its scenario to bring down the system in the DPRK with ease.

The U.S. is seriously mistaken if it thinks it can bring down the DPRK through its despicable smear campaign.

The U.S. imperialists' despicable and persistent psychological warfare to destabilize the DPRK, get it degenerate and bring it down will only harden the faith and will of the Korean people to firmly defend the country and socialism and consolidate the politico-ideological position and the anti-imperialist military front as firm as an invulnerable fortress.

The U.S. would be well advised to immediately stop its foolish anti-DPRK smear campaign.

Her journalist father Constantine edited the resistance newspaper

In England Arianna attended Cambridge University, where she studied
